A 2010 New Year's Message from Director Peter Hartung

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=OFicFRiMDAo>

Question: So how did you find yourself filling the shoes of Dr Fredrick Töben?

Peter Hartung: Well, about five years ago I spent a lot of time on the Internet and I became very interested in health issues and related topics and world politics.

I started reading about these people in Germany, Ernst Zündel, Horst Mahler, etc.- people being locked up for five years or more for questioning the Holocaust. I thought how can that be, are these guys crazy or what? The Holocaust is a fact. It's been proven beyond doubt, there is so much evidence. Anyway, I'm the type of person I need to know how things work. I wasn't happy with, I didn't understand why they were locked up. If they were crazy they should be put into a mental institution.

I came across the websites run by these people, and reading about what they were actually saying, and I spent many, many hours researching, looking at the evidence, and I came to the conclusion in the end that the Holocaust as we know it, that is the systematic extermination of Jews by the German Nazis in World War Two, a systematic extermination, a government order, and the actual gassings of Jews in gas chambers is nothing more than war-time propaganda. It's completely untrue, it did not happen. Now after 60 years plus of constant TV propaganda the general population believes that these things happened when they did not happen. So that's my story.

Question: You've had a long friendship with Dr Fredrick Töben. How did you get involved with him and Adelaide Institute?

Peter Hartung: Well, at this particular time when I did come to the conclusion that the gas chambers were fictitious I came across Dr Töben's website and information about him and how he'd been locked up in Germany for seven months for the crime of refusing to believe in the Holocaust. So I sent him an email and introduced myself and we met up and quite quickly became friends.

Question: After a long 14-year court action by such Jewish community leaders as Jeremy Jones, Dr Töben has been gagged much like a Soviet era political dissident and can no longer participate in the public debate surrounding the so-called Holocaust. Is this what brought you into the directorship of the Institute?

Peter Hartung: Yes, he has nothing to do with the Adelaide Institute, I'm the director of Adelaide Institute - I run the website, I am the only person who can access the website, I've got the passwords, and he doesn't have any input in it at all. I've had a lot of comments about me running the website. I've got a different approach, a different sense of humour, I like to have a bit of humour on the website, sort of make fun of certain things. A lot of my friends don't really understand what this is all about, they don't really understand why I'm in this and they suggest to me that I should find a new interest in life. But it's really an intellectual adventure. Once you get involved in it, once you start and then see how it works and all the pieces of the jigsaw fit together - there's no turning back. Either you've got it in your heart, you're a righteous person and you want to do good things, you want the world to be good and you want the truth. That's it. That's how the Töben case is put forth in the media, as a freedom of speech case. Really the opponents of freedom of speech, the enemy of free speech don't really know anything about free speech. They're the first ones who want to censor, get people locked up for having free speech.

Question: You do not advocate violence or vilification of anyone, but simply ask for an honest account of matters that took place during the Second World War, which includes the freeing of the German people from the stigma of being a nation of homicidal mass murderers. Is this an accurate description of your mission?

Peter Hartung: The German people were - in fact the real Holocaust of World War Two was the Holocaust of the German people. The deliberate policy since the, the very first day that Winston Churchill came to power as the Prime Minister of England, the very same night the first raid of English bombers went out and bombed civilians, and that was the policy of the British throughout the whole war, to demoralise the German people by bombing civilians, and this culminated in the end with the bombing of the most well-known, the bombing of Dresden, where between 300,000 and 500,000, mainly women and children and defenceless war refugees were roasted alive by the fire bombing of Dresden in 1945, on February 13 and 14, St Valentine's Day. The British bombers, wave after wave of dropping these fire bombs which set fire to everything created a huge inferno of the city. After about three or four hours when everyone thought it was safe to come out, these survivors, another wave came through. It was a horrendous war crime, and today through propaganda most people haven't even heard about it.

We're here at the top of the waterfall and down below you can see a turtle, or is it a tortoise? – not quite sure – happily swimming away. We saw a couple more in the shallows when we were down the bottom there, it's such a beautiful day, beautiful and cool at the top of the waterfall.

Question: Where do you see yourself taking the Adelaide Institute? What are your specific goals? Do they differ from Dr Töben's in style and substance?

Peter Hartung: Well, I'd like to become more proactive and really start pushing our message out there, the message of the truth and we'd be looking to increase the number of our supporters, increase the number of people out there. There's a lot of people out there who are already with us, supporting us, who know the truth, who've taken the time to study the various things about the truth of the second World War, all our different areas of focus, not only the Holocaust but exposing the whole criminal mentality of the Talmudic way of thinking. So we really want to get out there to the man on the street, the working man, not only the working man but the working woman as well. Most intellectuals are too indoctrinated to be able to think properly.

Wimmera Mail-Times, 13 January 2010

Controversial Wimmera writer Fredrick Töben is planning a trip to America to launch his latest book, 50 Days in Gaol. He aims to launch the book in Washington at the beginning of February, but he must first renew his American visa.

Because of his imprisonment in the South Australia for three months last year on contempt of court charges, he has had to obtain a national police certificate for the visa application. If he gains a visa and flies to America, he will risk arrest by German authorities again. He is willing to run the risk. "I am doing it on purpose," he said. "I am not a criminal, but the world is my prison." Germany has an arrest warrant out for him under section 130 of its penal code – forbidding people from denying the Holocaust.

Headlines

Dr Töben captured world headlines in 2008 when he was pulled off a plane at Heathrow Airport, London, and held in jail while Germany tried to extradite him. His new book, printed last week and yet to be launched, details his SWAT-style arrest on Flight AA98, his legal battle to avoid extradition, his 50 days in prison and the swirl of manoeuvring, polemics and drama surrounding the case.

Sub-titled Dr Fredrick Töben's Global Battle for Free Speech, the book includes a lengthy foreword by Gerard Menuhin, son of famous violinist Yehudi Menuhin.

Dr Töben has now spent time in five prisons – all for his belief in free speech, particularly relating to his views on the Holocaust – Mannheim, Germany, in 1999, Wandsworth and Bedford prisons in England in 2008, and Yatala Labour Prison and Cadell Training Centre in South Australia last year.

During his time in Yatala and Cadell, the 65-year-old former Goroke teacher lost 13 kilograms. He spent a considerable part of his time cleaning and painting. "I was 'poster boy' in the prison's newsletter, the Cadell Courier, in November," he said. "I almost single-handedly cleaned it up – like a good German. [At Yatala] My punishment was cleaning my cell. But it wasn't punishment because cleanliness is a godly virtue. "As a teacher I never gave yard duty [as a form of punishment] because it gave the wrong message that a cleaner was not worth much."

He said [some] people in prison were forgotten by the system. Many were not well educated, without good social connections. About 80 per cent were in for drug-related offences, and received 'liquid handcuffs' – methadone for their addiction. He believed drugs should be legalised, under strict controls, to minimise their destructive repercussions.

Dr Töben is now working on his next book, provocatively titled Arbeit Macht Frei – 'work makes you free', the message over the entrance to Auschwitz.

SOME TRIVIA – the not-so serious and the dangerous!

Woman slept with boy, 12, almost 200 times

Yahoo!7 January 20, 2010, 6:34 pm

A UK mother who had sex with a 12-year-old boy almost 200 times is facing jail.

The Sunday Sun reports Angela Sullivan gave the boy a pair of shoes after he slept with her for the 100th time. The unemployed 36-year-old reportedly corrupted the boy after getting him drunk and performing a sex act on him.

According to the Sunday Sun, Sullivan sent her own son to stay with grandparents so she could meet her victim.

When police arrested the single mother, they found a diary marked with stars against the dates they had sex. Sullivan's offences were reportedly discovered after rumours circulated she had fallen pregnant to the boy. She is set to be sentenced next month.

'Booze for boobs' promotion causes a stir

Yahoo!7 January 19, 2010, 12:06 pm

A nightclub in Singapore is attracting attention for a marketing strategy that offers free drinks according to women's bra sizes, the China Press reports.

The OverEasy nightclub introduced the event 'Fill My Cups' recently to promote events hosted by Australian DJ DCUP.

The promotion allows A-cup patrons one free drink, B-cups two, C-cups three, and D-cups can claim a free bottle of vodka.

"It was really a play on the guest DJ's name. When we heard that it was DCUP, we decided to give the event an added spin," said Ms Cheryl Ho, spokesman for The Lo & Behold Group, which runs OverEasy.

The stunt has drawn as much criticism as it has laughter, with some calling it distasteful, "I think the concept is funny but I would not degrade myself by being a part of it," a 19-year-old woman told The New Paper, a local publication.

Others believe the 'booze for boobs' gimmick is harmless, Student Lek Ning, 20, who considers herself a C-cup, said that she found the event hilarious, "After all, I'm rather proud of my assets," she said.

President of the Association of Women for Action and Research (Aware) Dana Lam labeled the event "demeaning". "I'd laugh at the silliness (of this event) if I didn't know better. Women should think twice before popping themselves in there," she said.

Ms Lam added that the "safety and dignity" of female customers have been disregarded, as they might be "subjecting themselves to molest and harassment".

To ascertain bra size the promotion will allow for one male and one female judge to visually assess bra cup size, "They are not boob experts, and neither are they from a bra company. They are our personal friends who will simply guess-timate as to the women's bra cup sizes," said Ms Ho, "We don't condone touch tests," she said.

Chinese Internet activists applaud Google, see no backdown

Chris Buckley and Lucy Hornby, Reuters January 13, 2010, 6:21 pm

BEIJING (Reuters) - Google's announcement that it may quit China over censorship and hacking drew applause, warnings and bouquets from dissidents and Internet activists on Wednesday, with few seeing much chance of the wary government giving ground.

Google, the world's top search engine, said it might shut its Chinese-language google.cn website after China-based cyber attacks on dissidents using its Gmail service.

At the company's China headquarters in Beijing's university district, a dozen locals laid a bouquet of red roses and white lilies on Google's sign at the company entrance.

They praised the company, shouting some salty Beijing slang.

"We want to express outrage, but not at Google. Coming here is a type of support for Google," said IT worker Zhao Gang, 30.

"Google faces very strict and adverse conditions in China. Something we knew in our hearts is now out in the open. I believe it's a watershed moment for the Internet in China this year."

Chinese activists have long complained that China's Communist Party has tightened its grip on the Internet, stifling the spread of information and ideas in the name of public safety and morals.

Their complaints have now been echoed by the world's biggest Internet firm and by Washington, where Hillary Clinton said the Chinese government should explain the attacks.

With such volleys aimed at China, Internet control is sure to climb the pile of frictions between Washington and Beijing, joining economic disputes, arms sales to Taiwan and Tibet.

"The surprise isn't the hacking or censorship. That's everywhere here," said Liu Ning, a writer and blogger in Beijing. "The surprise is such a big company breaking the silence about all these problems ... Until now, they've kept quiet."

Yet even Chinese dissidents who welcomed Google's stance saw little chance of Beijing bowing to the renewed pressure, worried the country's 360 million Internet users could be exposed to banned news and ideas, especially challenges to one-Party rule.

"Our space for expression on the Internet has been narrowing, because government control has become increasingly detailed and pervasive. I don't see that relaxing," said Xu Youyu, a Beijing academic who has campaigned for broader human rights.

Google did not say whether it believed the Chinese government was behind the hacker attacks.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry has repeatedly denied the government sponsors hacking. Foreign experts say some of the attacks bear signs of sophisticated organization.

Several Chinese rights campaigners said their email accounts, including Gmail, had often been targeted by "phishing" attacks, deceptive emails gain access to the user's information.

"China uses a lot of tools to target dissidents, and tries to break into their private thoughts and actions," said artist Ai Weiwei, who has mobilized Internet users on a range of sensitive causes. "Most dissidents aren't all that careful" about security.

If Google shuts google.cn, the government may tighten curbs on access to the company's search engine's based overseas, which can also support Chinese-language searches, said Wang Junxiu, a businessman who has campaigned against Internet censorship.

Many ordinary Chinese, however, use the local Baidu search engine to roam the Internet, and many of the Internet companies and users may not join the uproar over censorship.

"I sent around the message to my colleagues, but they didn't care," said Ma Jie, 28, a researcher who joined the small protest at Google's Beijing office. "They thought Google is stupid, when there's so much money to be made in China."

U.S. has met with China on Internet freedom Reuters January 20, 2010, 6:46 pm

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The United States has had multiple meetings with Chinese authorities over Internet freedom and will have more in the coming days, a top State Department official said on Tuesday amid continuing tensions between Google and Beijing.

Assistant U.S. Secretary of State Kurt Campbell told reporters that Washington viewed free and open Internet use as a "universal right that should be available to all people."

"The ability to operate with confidence in cyberspace is critical in a modern society and economy," he said.

"The U.S. government has had multiple meetings with Chinese authorities on this matter and will have more in the coming days," Campbell added.

Google said last week that it and other companies were targets of sophisticated cyber-spying from China, and threatened to pull out of the country.

"We take this matter very seriously," Campbell said. "The whole issue does raise serious concerns."

He said China had denied the allegations made by Google. Campbell said Washington believed Chinese authorities were in the best position to explain the situation, "and we are asking them for an explanation." (Reporting by Andrew Quinn and Arshad Mohammed; Editing by Eric Beech)

Iran welcomes West's new 'realism' on nuclear drive AFP January 20, 2010, 7:37 am

TEHRAN (AFP) - Iran on Tuesday welcomed what it called the West's newfound "realism" on Tehran's controversial atomic programme after world powers failed to decide on new sanctions.

The United States, meanwhile, said Iran's response to the international community's demands for assurances about its nuclear programme was inadequate while Britain warned of punitive financial measures.

But China, one of six world powers with Washington and London involved in talks on Iran, urged flexibility in the standoff over Tehran's nuclear drive and a return to talks.

However, Iranian Defence Minister Ahmad Vahidi renewed a warning that Tehran's forces could hit Western warships in the Gulf if it comes under attack over the nuclear standoff.

On the diplomatic front, foreign ministry spokesman Ramin Mehmanparast told reporters: "Speaking of sanctions is repetitive and it is not constructive.

"Some Western countries... should correct their approach and be realistic about our (nuclear) rights. And we feel there are traces of realism to be seen," he added.

On Monday, Foreign Minister Manouchehr Mottaki made similar positive comments.

"We are ready to help with the realistic approach and at the same time we will wait for public and backstage developments in Iran's nuclear case," Mottaki told reporters.

US State Department spokesman Philip Crowley said recent talks by six world powers on the nuclear standoff with Iran were constructive. "We are moving on both tracks," he said, about diplomacy and the threat of further sanctions.

But Iran's response to demands for assurances about its nuclear program remains inadequate, he said.

British Foreign Secretary David Miliband said financial sanctions could help bring the Islamic state into line.

"We believe that financial sanctions... have an important role to play in exerting pressure at the appropriate points in the (Iranian) regime and not affecting the Iranian people," Miliband told lawmakers. World powers made up of the UN Security Council's five permanent members plus Germany met in New York on Saturday but failed to reach an agreement about new sanctions.

The six are concerned about Tehran's rejection of a UN-brokered deal under which most of Iran's low enriched uranium (LEU) stockpile would be shipped abroad to be further enriched into reactor fuel.

Iran has come up with its own counter-proposal of a staged and simultaneous swap of LEU with nuclear reactor fuel. This has been largely rejected by world powers, insisting Tehran accept the International Atomic Energy Agency offer.

The New York meeting brought together senior officials from Britain, France, Germany, Russia and the United States. But China, signalling its reluctance to back tougher sanctions pushed by the West, sent a lower-level diplomat.

In Beijing, Mehmanparast's opposite number, Ma Zhaoxu, also at a press conference on Tuesday, said: "China has all along proposed the proper settlement of the Iran nuclear issue through dialogue and consultation ...

"We hope relevant parties can enhance consultations, show flexibility and promote the early peaceful solution of the relevant issue in a proper manner."

Ma said his country was aware of the proliferation concerns of the Western nations but insisted the Islamic republic had the right to the peaceful use of nuclear energy.

Iran's defence minister reiterated that his country was not cowed by the threat of military action.

"Why are there so many warships there? The Westerners know that these warships are the best target for operation by Iran if they do anything against (us)," Vahidi said.

Iranian officials have repeatedly threatened to deliver a "crushing response" and hit US targets, including its bases in the Gulf and neighbouring Iraq and Afghanistan, if Iran's nuclear sites are attacked.

The United States and its regional ally Israel, which accuse Iran of seeking atomic weapons under the guise of a civilian nuclear programme, have never ruled out a military option to thwart Tehran's nuclear drive.

Iran denies the charges.

U.S. charges 22 with bribery in arms sting Dan Margolies and Jeremy Pelofsky, Reuters January 20, 2010, 11:20 am

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - An executive of Smith & Wesson and 21 others have been charged with violating U.S. bribery laws after an undercover sting in which federal agents posed as arms-buying representatives of an African defence minister.

The defendants, including a senior Smith & Wesson sales official Amaro Goncalves, were accused of violating the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, or FCPA, and conspiracy to commit money laundering tied to the sale of guns, body armour and other law enforcement equipment.

The FCPA prohibits the payment of bribes to foreign officials in order to secure business contracts.

Twenty-one of the men were arrested in Las Vegas, where they were attending the SHOT Show, a large shooting-sports and hunting convention. The 22nd defendant was arrested in Miami.

"This is one case where what happens in Vegas didn't stay in Vegas," Assistant Attorney General Lanny Breuer said at a news conference.

Breuer said the investigation was continuing. He declined to say if any of the companies the defendants worked for faced prosecution.

The indictments, returned on December 11, were unsealed by a U.S. judge on Tuesday in U.S. district court in Washington.

Among those charged was the chief executive of Protective Products of America Inc, R. Patrick Caldwell, who previously worked for the U.S. Secret Service for 27 years and was in charge of the division for the vice president's protection. A spokesman for the service declined to say when Caldwell left the agency.

An attempt to reach Protective Products was not successful. Protective Products filed for bankruptcy protection last week and sought approval to be acquired by an affiliate of the private investment firm Sun Capital Partners Inc.

A representative for Smith & Wesson was not available for comment.

Most of the defendants were expected to be arraigned on Tuesday in Las Vegas.

STING OPERATION

As part of the FBI sting operation, an unidentified business associate who was a former executive for an arms manufacturer arranged a meeting between the arms sales representatives and undercover FBI agents who posed as representatives of an African country's minister of defence.

The agents told the sales representatives that in order to win a contract, they had to add a 20 percent "commission" to price quotes, half of which would go to the purported minister of defence and the rest would be split between the others.

In the case of the Smith & Wesson executive, Goncalves gave price quotes for two sales, a small one of 25 guns and a larger one with 1,800 pistols. He gave two price quotes for the transactions, including one that had its price inflated by 20 percent, the Justice Department said.

The two-and-a-half-year-long investigation involved 250 FBI agents, according to Mark Mendelsohn, deputy chief of the Justice Department's fraud division. In connection with the indictments, 150 agents executed 14 search warrants across the country and British police executed another seven, Justice Department officials said.

Three of the defendants worked for unnamed British companies; another worked for an unnamed Israeli company, according to the indictments. The defendants sought to obtain contracts for the sale of products ranging from grenade and tear gas launchers to pistols, ammunition and explosive detection kits.

Breuer said the investigation was the largest action ever undertaken by the Justice Department against individuals in an FCPA case. He also said it marked the department's first large-scale use of undercover techniques in an FCPA investigation.

"We're steadily pushing this unacceptable practice out of the business playbook by prosecuting companies and individuals who ignore the law, as well as by working with our international counterparts in their efforts to prevent and prosecute foreign bribery," Breuer said. He said the Justice Department currently has 140 open FCPA investigations. Kevin Perkins, assistant director of the FBI's criminal investigative division, said 20 agents were working on FCPA cases full time.

The cases are in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, Nos. 09-335 through 09-350. (Reporting by Dan Margolies and Jeremy Pelofsky, editing by Gerald E. McCormick and Tim Dobbyn) <http://au.news.yahoo.com/a/-/entertainment/6699433/u-s-charges-22-with-bribery-in-arms-sting/>

Subject: Fwd: Dear Prof. Alan Dershowitz...About CNN's Elizabeth Cohen

JANUARY 25, 2010

Professor Alan Dershowitz helps me understand how the ethnic sensibilities got in the way of CNN's

Elizabeth Cohen when she was reporting from Haiti

Dear Prof. Alan Dershowitz,

Thank you professor Alan Dershowitz for waking-up my brain. It's because of your column yesterday in the Jerusalem Post, Double Standard Watch: For bigots, Israel can do no right that I learned something new about myself. You rascal..! Could it be an inspection of your own brain that you think of me as a racist and a fascist? Are you sure you were not looking in the same mirror as Elizabeth Cohen's when you wrote that about me?

Your link to Elizabeth Cohen's video news report with the word "marvel", caused me to investigate the integrity of her reporting, due to your endorsement of her and your misunderstanding about me. Let's click on "marvel" and go to the video clip, before we continue with my discovery, thanks to you, of her propagandist reporting.

You wrote in your fist two opening paragraphs:

As most objective observers throughout the world marvel at Israel's efficiency and generosity in leading the medical aid efforts in Haiti, some bigots insist on using these efforts as an occasion to continue their attack on the Jewish state. Both the neo-Nazi hard right and the neo-Stalinist hard left cannot help but to demonize Israel, regardless of what Israel does.

The neo-Nazi Web site ReportersNotebook.com features a blog entitled The Zionization of Disaster Relief. It accuses Israel of "exploiting the suffering of poor, defenseless Haitians on behalf of Israeli Triumphalism." It complains that Israel is rendering medical aid to Haiti only to deflect attention from its crimes against the Palestinians.

Let's focus on your good friend Elizabeth Cohen

On the earth shattered grounds in Haiti on Jan.14, Elizabeth Cohen on CNN reports that the nation of Israel would send a field hospital and it would be up and running on the next day on Friday, Jan.15. In the mean time, according to Wikipedia (see LINK) over 150 nations and territories responded to the Haitian earthquake crisis. It was not worth a mention by Ms. Cohen. When Friday arrives and still there is no Israeli field hospital, she repeats the same reporting on Friday night that the Israelis will have a field hospital on Saturday, Jan.16. Why was this more news worthy than the other nations who were on the ground with field hospitals?

According to the Israel Defense Forces \(IDF\) Tweeter reports, the Israeli field hospital and it's 40 doctors arrived Friday morning. With military personnel of 200 to set up the field hospital overnight and into the early hours of Saturday morning before 8:04AM the Israeli field hospital had an ICU, with patients that were brought to them from a nearby adjacent makeshift hospital that was monitored by a Dr. Jennifer Furin. Who we would learn about, from Elizabeth Cohen, in reports she filed the following days and ways on Jan.16 with a video clip, Jan. 17 with a written article, and then Jan.18 with a spliced video clip --- all in a very sneaky way for Zionist propaganda effect.

With all of her anticipation for two nights telling CNN viewers about the arrival of an Israeli field hospital, she does not file a report about the Israeli field hospital's functioning on Saturday, Jan.16. Stretching this story for propaganda purposes until -- Monday Jan.18.

Why?

Monday is a bigger news day than a Saturday and definitely a Sunday when folks are watching sports, outside or at family functions. According to the IDF Tweeter reports the Israelis already had an operating field hospital functioning within walking distance from where her CNN crew was reporting unnecessary scary news.

Her live report on Saturday afternoon makes no sense and is contradictory. See my yellow highlights.

SHOW: CNN NEWSROOM 2:00 PM EST

January 16, 2010 Saturday

ELIZABETH COHEN, CNN SENIOR MEDICAL CORRESPONDENT: Fredricka, this is day three for me at this makeshift hospital of about 300 patients on the U.N. compound near the airport. And I'll tell you, the screams have intensified. We hear them all the time.

These are people with broken bones they are trying to control with morphine, and it's just not cutting it any more. For example, the loudest screams we hear are from people with pelvic fractures where the bones are sticking out of the skin. They need surgery.

And to talk about this I have Dr. Jennifer Furin here with me from Harvard medical school. And Dr. Furin, tell me, what percentage of the patients here need surgery within the next 24 hours?

DR. JENNIFER FURIN, HARVARD MEDICAL SCHOOL: Within the next twenty-four hours, approximately 30 percent of the patients in the hospital need immediate surgery or they are going to die.

COHEN: They will die of infections?

FURIN: They will die of infections, malnutrition, and metabolic derangements.

COHEN: The U.S. Department of Health and Human services does have a team that sets up operating rooms for patients like this. What are you hearing? Are they coming any time soon?

FURIN: In any situation like this with downed communications, rumor and speculation are the norm. We hear every day that the team will be set up, we'll be able to send patients over there for life-saving and limb-saving surgery. Every day the expectation goes down, the hope, most importantly, of the patients are dashed as there is nowhere to send them for necessary, life-saving surgeries.

COHEN: Is there any hope at all? Is anyone setting up an operating room for these patients at all?

FURIN: I know there is a lot of talk and speculation about it. The only people we've actually seen on the ground doing things are the team from Israel.

COHEN: The team from Israel is building an operating room?

FURIN: Yes. They are building a functioning triage level and surgical field hospital. They are the first ones who will be operating.

COHEN: Thank you, Dr. Jennifer Furin from Harvard medical school.

The news media blitz on Monday (Jan.18) kept reminding the public that the size of the Israeli field hospital would be able to help 500 patients a day compared to the typical field hospital of 140 patients a day. Yet at the end of the second day on Sunday Jan.17, it only helped 200 patients, this according to the Israeli Tweeter reports--short of 800 patients it could have helped, since it was built for 500 patients a day.

WHY WAS ELIZABETH COHEN MISLEADING CNN VIEWERS THAT THERE WAS CRISIS THAT AMERICAN DOCTORS WERE HAVING? WHY WAS DR. FURIN GIVING ANSWERS TO ELIZABETH COHEN THAT DID NOT MAKE ANY SENSE, ABOUT PATIENTS WERE GOING TO DIE WHEN THEY WERE BEING TRANSPORTED NEXT DOOR TO THE ISRAELI FIELD HOSPITAL SIX HOURS EARLIER? HAVING A CAPACITY TO HELP 500 PATIENTS A DAY, AND THE IDF TWEETER REPORTS THAT IN THE FIRST 48 HOURS ONLY 200 OUT A CAPACITY OF 1000 HAD USED THE FIELD HOSPITAL.

Elizabeth Cohen files an updated written report on her BLOG at 2:28 the next day Sunday Jan.17: "Furin said rumors and talk of setting up an operating room abound, but that nothing has materialized." But this is misleading! Dr. Furin had no need for surgical rooms since the Israeli field hospital was next door, to help (and was helping!) Dr. Furin and her staff for over 30 hours!!!

Here in its entirety is the updated written report she filed at 2:28 on Sunday Jan, 17. Keep in mind, she filed a video report on Jan.18, with Dr. Jennifer Furin, who she interviewed on Saturday Jan.16, saying that since she has been in Haiti she has been sending the most serious cases next door to the Israeli field hospital, and it was done immediately on Saturday morning at 8:04AM or earlier, according to the IDF Tweeter reports.

Port-au-Prince, Haiti \(CNN\) -- Nearly a third of the patients at a makeshift hospital in earthquake-ravaged Haiti will die without immediate surgery, a doctor warned Saturday.

"Within the next 24 hours, approximately 30 percent of the patients in the hospital need immediate surgery or they're going to die," Dr. Jennifer Furin, from the Harvard Medical School, told CNN of the roughly 300 patients at a makeshift hospital on a United Nations compound near Port-au-Prince's airport.

"They will die of infections, they'll die of dead tissue, they'll die of malnutrition and metabolic derangements," she said.

The screams at this temporary hospital have crescendoed since Tuesday's earthquake, and medical workers futilely tried to ease pain with morphine. The loudest cries came from those with pelvic fractures so severe that their bones protruded through their skin.

Furin said rumors and talk of setting up an operating room abound, but that nothing has materialized.

"Every day as the sun starts to go down, the hope, most importantly, of the patients are dashed, as yet again there's nowhere to send them for these necessary life-saving surgeries," she said.

One team, from the Israel Defense Forces, began setting up a surgical field level hospital at an abandoned athletic field.

"They're the first ones who are going to be operating," Furin said.

The Israeli delegation of 220 arrived at the Antoine Izmerly soccer field Friday to begin setting up tents and equipment. Its doctors and other medical personnel anticipated treating about 500 casualties a day. Much of the aid will be focused on helping any survivors of the destroyed U.N. headquarters in the capital, Port-au-Prince.

Facts that Elizabeth Cohen did not want to report, the nations from the same region as Israel were not noted and also may, may explain why the Israeli field hospital was so underutilized.

From Jan. 14-16 the same time frame of the Israeli arrival to Haiti this was not reported by CNN:

Jordan: A Jordanian air force plane carrying a military field hospital and 6 tons of food and supplies left Amman on January 14. A second plane carrying Jordanian medics left the following day.

Iran: Iran's Red Crescent society sent 30 tons of humanitarian aid, including food, tents and medicine, on January 16.

Kuwait: Kuwait donated $1 million to relief efforts; the Red Crescent is preparing 100 tons of food, medical supplies, tents and blankets to fly to Haiti.

Lebanon: Lebanon is loading a plane with 25 tons of tents and 3 tons of medical supplies; it leaves tomorrow.

Morocco: Two planes carrying 24 tons of aid left the city of Kenitra on January 16. The Moroccan government has pledged $1 million in aid to Haiti.

Qatar: A Qatari C-17 aircraft loaded with 50 tons of aid left for Port-au-Prince on January 14. The Qatari government also sent a rescue team to set up a field hospital; the Red Crescent will sent another $100,000.

Turkey: Three cargo planes -- carrying search-and-rescue teams, a mobile hospital and aid materials -- left for Haiti on January 16. Another two planes left yesterday. Turkey has also donated $1 million in cash.

United Arab Emirates: The UAE sent two planes loaded with tents, and a team from the UAE's Red Crescent will arrive in the Dominican Republic tomorrow to buy $500,000 worth of supplies and truck them to Haiti. Another 50 tons of emergency supplies will be air-lifted from Abu Dhabi tomorrow.

See how FOX News filed a fair and balanced report (I can't believe I am saying this about Fox News). The report they aired on the same Monday as Ms. Cohen's aired on Jan. 18:Treating Survivors

Compared to this propaganda news item that you drool and marvel over:

Elizabeth Cohen filed this video report on Monday morning, Jan.18. As you can see she did not air the entire interview with Dr. Furin on Jan.16 or she went back to her on Sunday to interview her with staged questions. She did not want to air the entire interview until Jan.18, for propaganda purposes. Let's "Marvel" at the MARVELOUS clip--again. It is self-explanatory how she spliced the news piece and asked coached and leading questions for the doctors to answer with the kind of answers she wanted.

Extra...extra...extra..read all about it...

01:50 CNN Elizabeth Cohen:

Haiti Day 6 - No one but the Israelis have come to help any of ...interviews makeshift medical tent personnel on January 18, on Monday morning. Asking Harvard Medical Dr. Jennifer Furin,_"Have the Americans set up a field hospital ..."(Like Ms. Cohen does not know the State Department passed the baton for Israel to milk the publicity that she helped facilitate.)

Yes Alan....you have a rabid Zionist (like yourself--you rascal) reporter doing what she is supposed to do...make sure the Israeli effort goes to the front of the media bus and everybody else to the back. Nothing new. That's standard operating procedure and the network editors know that. And the name of the game is holding the viewer for the ads to run. The big ad companies who do the Fortune 500 company ad buys are mainly Jewish owned and run, so Jewish Power in the USA has a kind of vertical monopoly. Re-read JJ Goldberg's book: Jewish Power to remind yourself. Or re-read your own books that you allege you wrote. But with all the mess there is out there, Alan, the general public is not going to care about PR wars. About who did what, or what you think of me and ReportersNotebook.com. Maybe the real story is/was the under supply medicines and supplies for the hospitals that were functioning. We may learn that the orthopedic supply chain may not have a ton of excess capacity in it for tens of thousands of victims at one time. Where, like a Walmart warehouse, it could be loaded and shipped down in 12 hours.

Peace.
