The DARRYL POTTS CASE, CANBERRA, ACT – and more ...

- Sanity in Australia prevails - for how much longer though?

From: Fredrick Toben toben@toben.biz

Sent: Thu 20/01/11 1:00 PM

Remember Canberra bureaucrat Richard Kregel? He lost his decade-long government job at Air Services after attending the 2006 Teheran Holocaust Conference.

Now ADT member Peter Molony has thrown the spanner in the works for like-minded Jewish Supremacists and their proxies, such as McEvoy, Branson and Lander, by stating, and without bending to Jewish pressure:

"The fact that he holds political and religious views and opinions that are offensive is not, in my opinion, sufficient to find that the public interest requires that he no longer hold a firearms licence. To do so would be to embark on a slippery slope ... to totalitarianism."

Jew hater Darryl Potts given okay for gun

EXCLUSIVE by Joe Hildebrand The Daily Telegraph January 20, 2011 12:00AM

A MAN declared a white supremacist by police and ruled a possible risk to public safety by a psychiatrist has been granted the right to possess a handgun.

Darryl Potts believes there is a Jewish conspiracy to destroy other races.

Darryl Potts, who believes there is a Jewish conspiracy to destroy other races, had his AB firearms and probationary pistol licences revoked by police after he expressed "white supremacy views" to officers during an incident involving domestic violence. But, in a landmark case, the Administrative Decisions Tribunal has ruled that, even though Mr Potts might hold extreme and offensive views, that does not mean he is mentally impaired and he is legally entitled to a firearm licence - read the Tribunal's ruling in full - http://lawlink.nsw.gov.au/adtjudgments/2010nswadt.nsf/f1a6baff573a075dca256862002912ec/ac37a2776e9f383dca2578090011ff5b?OpenDocument

The decision was at odds with the opinion of police, the Firearms Registry and a psychiatrist's clinical assessment that Mr Potts had the potential "to put public safety at risk".

Mr Potts, an elevator technician at Federal Parliament, pursued the case because he believed having a revoked firearm licence could affect his security clearance to work in government buildings. He said he wanted to take a stand against the trend of removing people's firearms.

Both during the case and in extensive interviews with The Daily Telegraph, Mr Potts made a series of bizarre claims about Jewish people.

He told the tribunal he did not believe six million Jews were killed in the Holocaust. "I say the six million is a load of hogwash," he said.

After having his licences reinstated, he said he believed Jews were plotting to dilute other races by encouraging mixed-race children and he had unwittingly played into their hands by having children with his Korean-born wife - from whom he has separated.

"If I had've known this information I would not have participated in mixed-race marriage," he said.

He also said Jewish spies, posing as "Israeli art peddlers" were visiting his house because he was "a person of interest" to them.

After the 2009 domestic dispute at his estranged wife's house, the Firearms Registry referred Mr Potts to a psychiatrist on the basis that he "has expressed white supremacy [sic] ... views that have raised concerns regarding his mental health".

After Mr Potts stated, "I am a very angry man", the psychiatrist diagnosed him as having a personality disorder.

ADT member Peter Molony rejected the psychiatrist's opinion and ruled, "Mr Potts is an intelligent, manipulative and calculating man. The fact that he holds political and religious views and opinions that are offensive is not, in my opinion, sufficient to find that the public interest requires that he no longer hold a firearms licence," Mr Molony found.

"To do so would be to embark on a slippery slope ... to totalitarianism."

Parliament crackdown as Jew hater Darryl Potts faces the sack

Joe Hildebrand, The Daily Telegraph, January 21, 2011 12:00AM

AN ACCUSED white supremacist could be banned from Parliament House as computer experts work to block the online posting of offensive material from within the nation's capital building.

The move follows new revelations Jew hating and other offensive posts were sent to websites from an IP address belonging to the Parliamentary Services Department.

The self-description and language in the posts matches that of parliamentary elevator technician Darryl Potts, exposed yesterday as a Holocaust-denying extremist who has just been granted a handgun licence.

The messages refer to Jews as living in "Satan's sewer" and visiting his family home posing as "Israeli art peddlers". Mr Potts did not deny he was the author of the posts when contacted yesterday.

Parliamentary Services acting head David Kenny said the posts were a clear breach of the rules and parliamentary technicians were working on a way to block the sender.

Mr Kenny also said he was in discussions with the company that directly employed Mr Potts about potentially banning him from the building.

The posts were written under the pseudonym Kinkyboy and written between 2006 and 2010.

In one traced to a parliamentary computer he says: "Jewish Fascists masquerading as 'Israeli Art Peddlers', likely inspired by the slippery reptiles at the B'nai B'rith, have visited the family home when the kids were in the house" - the exact same story and phrase Mr Potts told The Daily Telegraph.

Under another name on a white supremacist website he claims the Jewish holy book, the Talmud, allows sexual abuse of children.

In another post he describes himself as a "6'+ blue-eyed Anglo-Celt, who like some others, wears a kilt, blows the pipes, but refuses to defer to kikes". Mr Potts wears a kilt and plays in bagpipe band.

In yet another post on a white supremacist website he reveals himself to be "KinkyBoy" and likens Jews to flies and maggots. Mr Potts declined to comment further yesterday.

Judge rules anti-Semite allowed to have a gun

Joshua Levi, 28 January 2011 [-emphasis added by ed. AI]

LEADERS of the Jewish community in Canberra say they fear for their safety after a Holocaust-denier was granted a gun licence.

ACT Jewish community president Manny Waks

While trying to have his licence reinstated, Canberra-based Darryl Potts told the NSW Administrative Decision Tribunal (ADT) that the number of Jews who died in the Holocaust is a made-up number, that the United States is a Jewish establishment, and that Mossad is spying on him.

"When I speak about the Holocaust, I say the six million is probably a load of hogwash," Potts told the ADT.

Potts, who works at Parliament House, lost his gun licence after being issued with a domestic violence order following a confrontation with his former partner in 2009.

He said he applied to have his licence reinstated because without it, he struggled to pass the security clearances he needed to be able to work.

Psychiatrist Dr Robert Tym, who examined Potts, told the tribunal that he is someone who has the potential to put public safety at risk if he was in the possession of a firearm.

Despite this testimony and Potts's blatant anti-Semitism, ADT member Peter Molony said he was not a threat.

"I concluded that Mr Potts is an intelligent, manipulative and calculating man," Molony said. "The fact that he holds political and religious views and opinions that are offensive is not, in my opinion, sufficient to find that the public interest requires that he no longer hold a firearms licence."

He found that Potts had never advocated violence or attempted to use force in order to advance his views so he would not be a threat to society.

But ACT Jewish community president Manny Waks clearly disagreed with the judgement.

"We certainly view Mr Potts as a potential threat to our community," Waks, the former executive director of the B'nai B'rith Anti-Defamation Commission, said. "I discussed this matter with our contacts in the Australian Federal Police, who informed me there is very little they could do due to the ADT ruling."

Here is a 2008 case where Psychiatrist Dr Robert Tym expresses his opinion supportively of a man, something he did not do in the Potts case. Wonder why?

Juvenile porn obsessive jailed

BY SALLY PRYOR, COURT REPORTER, 04 Dec, 2008

A Canberra music teacher who became so obsessed with looking at child pornography on the internet that he developed deep vein thrombosis has been sentenced to eight months in jail. Richard Llewellyn, 58, of Chisholm, was arrested in March as part of Operation Centurion, a national crackdown on child pornography and web paedophiles.

He pleaded guilty in June to possessing about 17,000 images and videos of explicit child pornography and using the Net to access the material.

He told police he had been looking at child pornography almost every night for the past two years, usually in the evenings while his family slept, and found the images arousing.

But, in later sentencing submissions, psychiatrist Robert Tym said Llewellyn told him he had been intrigued by the violence in the images, some of which involved children as young as four months, rather than the sexual aspects.

He said Llewellyn also explained that he had been aroused by images of adults and older adolescents but not of children.

The court had heard that, in downloading and viewing images that contained children performing sexual acts on other children, adults and animals, Llewellyn claimed he did not realise at the time that his actions would hurt anyone.

REMEMBER THE DR THOMAS KOSSMANN CASE, MELBOURNE, Victoria?

Remember this victimisation of German Dr Thomas Kossmann and how soon after his removal from Melbourne's Alfred Hospital, Federal Health Minister Nicola Roxon announced The Alfred Hospital would link with a trauma unit based at a Jerusalem hospital?

Alfred probe says Thomas Kossmann lied about skills

Grant McArthur and Geoff Wilkinson, Herald Sun, May 22, 2008 12:00AM

CONTROVERSIAL surgeon Professor Thomas Kossmann put patients' lives at risk, a panel of his peers has found. Prof Kossmann needlessly operated on at least 15 patients with surgery he did not have the skill to undertake, they said. The former head of the Alfred's

He told a parole officer he had "minimised the wrongness" of his actions by telling himself he was simply viewing images.

"I have never had the desire to molest or abuse anyone in my entire life, child or adult. I am deeply ashamed of my offence," he said in the report.

But he did tell police he had known what he was doing was wrong, and had been trying unsuccessfully to stop.

In handing down the sentence yesterday, Justice Hilary Penfold said Llewellyn's diagnosis of attention deficit disorder by another doctor did not justify the offence, but did perhaps explain his obsessive tendency.

She compared his case with that of Michael Edward Hatch, a 38-year-old former Australian Federal Police officer who was also arrested as part of Operation Centurion and was sentenced by the ACT Magistrates Court in July to five months in custody.

Justice Penfold sentenced Llewellyn to three months in full-time custody and five months of periodic detention, to be followed by a two-year good behaviour order.

She told him the next few months would not be easy because the ACT prison system had no facility to separate sex offenders from other prisoners.

Llewellyn waved to his family in the public gallery as he was led out of the courtroom, and said, "Look after your mother" as one of his daughters wept.

Dr Robert Tym's Summary

An extensive career - first in Neuroscience and later Psychiatry - working in positions ranging from Research Fellow at the US Atomic Energy Commission, Rockefeller Traveling Scholar, Research Fellow and Lecturer at both Harvard and Berkely, Professor of Neurosurgery at the University of Torontoto, CA and public and private Psychiatric practices in both large and small cities across the world - amounts to a vast mass of experience upon which Robert Tym's current research into PTSD is based.

His latest publication featured in Traumatology Journal 15 (3) is the culmination - and palimpsest - of his groundbreaking developments in the detection and cure of individuals suffering from PTSD - especially those in the armed forces recently returned from active duty in the Middle-East.

trauma department was unavailable for comment because of a family illness yesterday, as details of the probe were revealed for the first time.

Prof Kossmann still faces a police fraud investigation as well as separate probes by the Ombudsman, the Transport Accident Commission, Medicare and the Medical Practitioners Board.

The panel appointed by the Alfred found Prof Kossmann lied about his skills and experience to gain accreditation to work in Australia. They said he did not have the knowledge to undertake the surgery he did.

The German-born surgeon was a recruit to the state's top trauma unit in 2001 after being exempted from a competency exam by the Royal Australasian College of Surgeons because of his outstanding CV.

Health Minister Daniel Andrews yesterday promised to examine the processes used to accredit overseas-trained surgeons, but refused to blame individual groups for the Kossmann debacle.

Headed by respected orthopaedic surgeon Bob Dickens, the panel investigated complaints about operations carried out on 24 patients over the last three years. It found "significant" concerns in 15 operations and less serious ones in nine.

In one case, the panel found Prof Kossmann became "disorientated" and drilled into an artery leading to a patient's brain because he did not know the anatomical position he was operating on, causing "catastrophic bleeding" that risked death.

In another, Prof Kossmann made a surgical incision in the wrong part of a patient's body, making it impossible to do the operation correctly.

"The nature of these practices and decision-making was . . . flawed in its conception and harmful in its effect," according to the panel, which included Brisbane orthopaedic surgeon John Tuffley and Sydney orthopaedic surgeon Stephen Ruff.

The panel found Prof Kossmann raked in hundreds of thousands of dollars for operations performed by others, not performed at all, or which were not required.

It recommended the TAC, WorkCover and Medicare audit his billing practices. The Herald Sun has seen Prof Kossmann's formal response to the review panel. He accused the doctors whose complaints prompted the probe of being motivated by self-interest.

"I believe that the complainants were motivated following discussions I had with them concerning their own behaviour," Prof Kossmann's response says.

"This included falsifying timesheets, working in private outside Melbourne despite being on call, delaying patient treatment to gain financial benefits, non-attendance at peer review meetings and inappropriate behaviour toward female staff."

He rejected the panel's finding that he performed unnecessary surgery "in a significant number of cases", saying the two cases nominated by the panel involved a surgical technique he had performed successfully on over 250 patients.

While the review panel's terms of reference did not allow it to examine whether other surgeons or hospitals engaged in similar billing practices, it recommended the trauma unit's audit processes be reviewed.

But Bayside Health chief executive Jennifer Williams said no complaints had been made about other surgeons, so nobody else would be investigated.

She said Prof Kossmann was hired only because the Royal Australasian College of Surgeons accredited him.

The college said the hospital had failed to monitor his performance.

Several of the patients have contacted the hospital after seeing reports of the scandal. Another dozen would be contacted by the Alfred, Ms Williams said.

She said Prof Kossmann had been a well-respected surgeon.

"A number of us had worked with him closely over a number of years," she said. "But the nature of the complaints were such that we needed to look at them, and on close examination we have now got these serious findings," she said. "It is a surprise, but we are entirely satisfied that there has been a very robust and comprehensive process to come up with these conclusions."

Kossmann to continue practising

Victoria's Medical Practitioners Board has amended the registration of controversial surgeon Thomas Kossmann's to limit his ability to independently perform spinal and pelvic surgery.

- Registration amended
- No 'risk' evidence
- 'Positive step'

But the board has permitted The Alfred hospital's former trauma director to continue practising as an orthopedic surgeon.

Releasing a statement on its ongoing investigation into Professor Kossmann's clinical practices, the board said it had no evidence at this stage to suggest the German-born surgeon posed a risk to public safety so long as he stuck to an agreement not to engage in spinal or pelvic surgery without the close supervision of a more senior surgeon. As part of the arrangement between Professor Kossmann and the board, he has agreed to provide monthly statutory declarations to verify he has complied with the restrictions on his registration regarding spinal and pelvic surgery.

Professor Kossmann resigned from The Alfred in April ahead of the release of a hospital-commissioned peer review which concluded he engaged in flawed, excessive surgery and rorted the Transport Accident Commission insurance scheme.

Professor Kossmann has released a statement welcoming the board's decision to allow him to continue practising orthopedic surgery.

"I would like to reiterate I totally reject the flawed findings of The Alfred hospital Peer Review and I see the board's decision as a positive step in fully restoring my professional reputation," he said.

Kossman hits back at 'ruined reputation' claims

Medical Board clears surgeon Kossmann

Michael Bachelard, The Age, May 9, 2010

THE Medical Practitioners Board has delivered another blow to the Victorian Ombudsman by clearing controversial trauma surgeon Thomas Kossmann to practise spinal and pelvic surgery.

It's the fifth and final group to clear Dr Kossmann of wrongdoing after Ombudsman George Brouwer accused him in 2008 of poor practice, inappropriate billing and "harvesting patients" to maximise income.

In a statement to The Sunday Age, the board confirmed that on April 23 it had lifted any conditions on Dr Kossmann's registration. It said it was "satisfied that Dr Kossmann has demonstrated that he has the necessary skills and training in pelvic and spinal surgery".

The board also affirmed that Dr Kossmann "understands the appropriate and ethical use of Medicare item numbers related to orthopaedic surgery".

Dr Kossmann is not currently working as a surgeon, but an agreement between the Medical Practitioners Board and the Royal Australian College of Surgeons means any surgery Dr Kossmann does for the next two years will be reviewed by two of his peers.

The Ombudsman's 2008 report recommended further investigations by the police, the Australian Tax Office, the Transport Accident Commission, WorkSafe and the board. All have now found that Dr Kossmann has no case to answer.

His lawsuit for defamation and unfair dismissal against his former employer, The Alfred Hospital, is now the only action that remains on foot arising from the events that wrecked his reputation.

He is seeking an apology, compensation and reinstatement by the hospital.

The board's finding will strengthen the hand of critics of the Ombudsman, including the Australian Medical Association, which said yesterday Dr Kossmann had been denied procedural fairness during the investigation of him.

The Ombudsman's powers are now under examination as part of a review of Victoria's anti-corruption arrangements by Elizabeth Prout.

Dr Kossmann first came under fire in late 2007 when allegations were made about whether he was performing unnecessary and dangerous surgery on patients, and rorting the funding mechanism of the Transport Accident Commission.

Dr Kossmann is working as a consultant for a law firm.

Thomas Kossmann forced overseas to get work

Geoff Wilkinson, Herald Sun, August 19, 2010 9:07PM

CONTROVERSIAL trauma surgeon Thomas Kossmann has been forced to leave the country to restore his battered reputation.

Dr Kossmann flew to East Timor on Thursday for a short-term posting with the Australian Defence Force at a hospital in Dili.

He has also been engaged as a consultant at a leading hospital in Belgium, where he will teach and perform surgery several times a year.

The German-born surgeon has been forced overseas since a campaign to discredit him cost him his job as The Alfred hospital's director of trauma.

Once one of the country's busiest surgeons, he has struggled to find suitable work in Australia despite being cleared of all allegations.

Police, the Australian Tax Office, the Transport Accident Commission, WorkSafe, the Medical Practitioners Board and the Royal Australasian College of Surgeons have all found he has no case to answer.

Dr Kossmann was accused by other surgeons and the state ombudsman of rorting the TAC by using fraudulent billing practices and performing dangerous and unnecessary surgery.

Thomas Kossmann at Melbourne airport. Pic- Craig Borrow, Herald Sun

The ombudsman, George Brouwer, alleged Dr Kossmann had "harvested" insured patients to maximise his income from the TAC, billed for procedures he never performed and engaged in harmful, flawed and unnecessary surgery.

Dr Kossmann would not discuss his plans when approached by the Herald Sun at Melbourne Airport yesterday.

He said his lawyers had advised him to make no comment until his legal action against The Alfred had been resolved. Dr Kossmann sued the hospital's operator, Bayside Health, for $30 million over claims he was unlawfully dismissed and defamed.

The Alfred's counter-claim said it was owed several hundred thousand dollars in fees Dr Kossmann claimed from the TAC and WorkSafe but failed to pay to the hospital under an income sharing deal.

Dr Kossmann's posting to a civilian hospital in Dili will last only a week.

He will graduate from Melbourne University next week as a Master of Health and Medical Law. One of the subjects in the graduate course is advanced civil litigation.

At Antwerp's University Hospital, Dr Kossmann will teach neurosurgeons the same "halo" head brace technique of minimally invasive spinal reconstruction that was heavily criticised by the ombudsman.

AMA chief Jane Stephens said Dr Kossmann was denied the chance to defend himself over claims made by the ombudsman "behind the cloak of parliamentary privilege". She said the ombudsman's allegations had damaged Dr Kossmann's reputation. She said the AMA was pleased with government plans to downgrade the Ombudsman's powers and demand greater procedural fairness as part of its review of integrity and anti-corruption systems.

Dr Kossmann, started work as director of trauma at the Alfred in 2001. A peer review panel was set up in 2007 to investigate complaints about his clinical conduct and billing practices. Dr Kossmann was suspended on full pay in November, 2007, and resigned from the Alfred in April, 2008.

BSA rules against man accused of denying Holocaust

Otago Daily Times, Friday, 31 December 2010

Far-right conservative Kerry Bolton says he is disappointed a complaint about a Radio New Zealand programme accusing him of being a Holocaust denier has not been upheld by the Broadcasting Standards Authority (BSA).

The segment called Ideas on Sunday with Chris Laidlaw, aired in May 2009, featured an interview with sociologist Scott Hamilton about anti-Semitic fringe groups in New Zealand that were denying or downplaying the gravity of the Holocaust.

Dr Hamilton said Dr Bolton was a "key figure" among hardcore Holocaust deniers who were active in New Zealand. He said Dr Bolton had close connections with Australian Frederick Toben who had recently been jailed for his views.

Dr Bolton would also go to demonstrations against Israel's involvement in Palestine "and he'll present himself as a legitimate critic of Israel foreign policy and he'll slide from that to anti-Semitism and Holocaust denial", Dr Hamilton said.

Young people may have been "taken in by this stuff", he added.

Dr Hamilton also accused Dr Bolton of creating the theory that Europeans were the first to colonise New Zealand before Maori "invaders" wiped them out.

Dr Bolton complained to the BSA about the piece and said statements made by Dr Hamilton were inaccurate. His objections included denying he had worked closely with Toben, that he was the inventor of the Celtic New Zealand theory or he had any influence over "unwary youth".

Radio NZ argued statements made by Dr Hamilton were his expert opinion to which the standard of accuracy did not apply.

It pointed to Dr Bolton being listed as the New Zealand Associate to the organisation run by Toben as well as a number of articles connecting Dr Bolton to Holocaust denial.

Dr Hamilton provided an article called Kerry Bolton: The Man, The Myth, The Manmyth, that contained a quote attributed to Dr Bolton calling the Holocaust "fictitious blather".

Dr Hamilton also identified articles written by Dr Bolton about the claim Europeans were the first to colonise New Zealand that pre-dated any other publication about the theory.

Young people were probably influenced by Dr Bolton's views because of his position of leadership in organisations such as the National Front, which had a large youth membership, Dr Hamilton said.

In reply, Dr Bolton said he had not been in Australia for 20 years, so could not have worked closely with Toben. He also had not heard of the European colonisation theory until 2003, so could not have invented the idea, he said.

He also denied infiltrating numerous anti-war demonstrations to air his views.

The BSA originally upheld Dr Bolton's complaint, but Radio NZ appealed the decision to the High Court, which referred the complaint back to the BSA for further consideration.

After receiving further submissions from both Radio NZ and Dr Bolton, the BSA reversed its decision and denied the complaint.

The BSA said that through his own writings, Dr Bolton was shown to be a Holocaust denier.

In a majority decision, the panel said it was clear that as an expert in the subject, Dr Hamilton was giving his opinion as well as presenting facts about the subject.

If the panel had upheld the complaint it would have placed "an unreasonable limit on the broadcaster's right to freedom of expression...". Dr Bolton today told NZPA his reaction to the decision was "not exactly positive".

"The programme was comprised entirely of lies and they've upheld lies as fair comment basically, as reasonable comment and expert opinion."

Dr Bolton said he would not describe himself as a Holocaust denier, "but I simply don't know how it happened -- to what extent it happened".

Fredrick Töben: Letter to Editor Denying the Holocaust

Submitted on Fri, 31/12/2010 - 6:37pm.

Here we go again - a quasi judicial body is attempting to criminalize expression of opinions thereby destroying one of the pillars of British Common Law.

This is, of course, not a coincidence because that kind of attack on Common Law has been going on for decades.

Remember how in New Zealand academia scandalised itself by revealing its moral and intellectual bankruptcy when in 2000 Canterbury University bent to Jewish pressure and initiated the enquiry into the granting in 1993 of an MA to Dr S J Hayward whose thesis claimed that there was no gas chamber evidence at Auschwitz.

Dr Kerry Bolton and I have associated formally and informally - but anyone who claims that this creates a principle of "guilt by association" forgets that anyone who is in the thinking-information gathering industry can be charged with such a dubious principle.

The aim is to smear individuals, and in my case individuals fear what I have to say because they cannot refute my probing questions, and thus resort to smearing my character by labelling me 'hater', 'Holocaust denier', 'antisemite', 'racist', 'Nazi', 'terrorist'.

Remember, any concerned citizen should know about everything about life but need not have done everything. This is why the imperative for free expression is so important, which unfortunately some have split into 'free speech' and 'hate speech'.

Those propagating the concept of 'hate speech' are depriving individuals of a free flow of information by pushing to have so-called 'hate speech' criminalised.

All too often it is such individuals who are the real haters, the ones who fear an open public debate on contentious issues.

Unlike the climate change Ponzi scheme, the Holocaust as been around much longer and in a number of countries is anchored in law where matters of fact cannot be introduced because that in itself would generate a new offence.

I smile when I read the sentence: 'The BSA said that through his own writings, Dr Bolton was shown to be a Holocaust denier'.

This makes my maxim relevant: 'Don't blame the Jews, blame those that bend to their pressure'.

Oh, by the way, I spent 3 months in a South Australian prison because of 'contempt of court' not because I refuse to believe in the fairy stories called the 'Holocaust-Shoah' that are sold to a gullible world public as an historical fact.

It's a fine legal technical line but Australia's judiciary is clever enough not to go down the German road where expression of opinions is a criminal matter. That is why I was not extradited to Germany in October-November 2008 when the European Arrest Warrant had me pulled off a plane at Heathrow Airport because the Germans want me for five years because I refuse to believe in the Holocaust-Shoah.

Subject: from New Zealand

Kerry, me mate! - haven't said hello to you for some years - how are things with you in New Zealand?

I've relinquished control of Adelaide Institute and am now a senior citizen, a concerned senior citizen.

Once I was quoted as flippantly saying: 'I don't sue, I'm not a Jew!' I still stand by that principle because once you don't worry about what others think of you, then it doesn't matter that individuals have a go at you. It reflects on their own moral worth by revealing their ethical standards.

I am just reading Nancy Turner Banks' >AIDS, Opium, Diamonds, and Empire< which is quite revealing because it contextualizes those who propagated the HIV=AIDS hypothesis without subjecting it to scrutiny, thereby refusing to consider deficiencies that became glaring as this hypothesis failed to account for what was happening on the ground.

At p20 she states:

>> Several years after the shock had subsided in the medical community of the premature announcement of the finding of a "probable" cause of AIDS and there was some time for sober reflection, thousands of physicians, scientists and Thabo Mbeki, former President of South Africa, openly challenged the conclusions of the viral/AIDS hypothesis. There were too many unanswered questions in this thesis.

The challenge for an open scientific debate was deemed outrageous and irresponsible by those who had vested interests in the profits and the control that came with supporting the hierarchical position. The voices of those who called for transparency and open debate on the most important medical issue of the day were intentionally silenced by the usual counterinsurgency techniques of slander, derision, name calling, intentional medical perjury, and distortion of scholarly based counter-analysis.

All of this was buttressed by the hysteria of the gay community who preferred to live in denial rather than face their own culpability in the self poisoning that led to the creation of the crisis.<<

Like the Climate Change/Global Warming Ponzi scheme, this AIDS matter didn't last too long but proponents managed to give it legal protection, unlike the WMD lie and the 9/11 insider job lie that still are open to enquiry, though the various insurance payouts will make it more difficult to get a full resolution/clarification of what happened - and the Holocaust-Shoah Ponzi scheme that has held firm for more than 4 decades still awaits resolution though on paper the Revisionists have won this war quite conclusively.

Let's hope you like my response - and get the message across that media people must fight against the principle of 'guilt by association'. How else can we gather our information, which necessitates us going into the enemy's camp on occasions?

Dear Fredrick

Even the NZPA report is not correct, although that's not surprising. The BSA did not find that through my own writings I'm a holocaust denier - they declined to find on any matter of fact, and said that the complaint should have been made under 'fairness' rather than 'accuracy' - although I sought their advice on this from the start, and my original complaint was upheld.

My complaint centered not on Hamilton's opinions but on claims he made as fact, each of the points of which I showed to be false. In further evidence RNZ stated that I had presented papers to the AI at least twice, and had an anonymous anarchist to testify that I had attended a peace demo in 2003 with a 'Remember Dresden' placard. I was able to get then Kapiti Councillor Allan Tristram, who was at the demo and to whom I spoke, to write that no such placard existed.

The article is quite useless.

I'm not interested in debating points of the Holocaust and can contribute nothing of scholarly interest. I just say that the technicalities are a moot point since atrocities were committed on all sides, and are tragic regardless of who the victims are and the manner by which they died. Of course that's also enough to label someone with sinister intent.
