

ADELAIDE INSTITUTE

PO Box 3300
Adelaide 5067
Australia
Mob: 61+401692057
Email: info@adelaideinstitute.org
Web: <http://www.adelaideinstitute.org>

Online
ISSN 1440-9828

June 2013 No 695

---

WHAT IS A BLOG? – here's an example ...

S. H. Pearson

Magna Est Veritas

Tuesday, April 30, 2013

Smearing Kennedy

Listen bitches. Why would a man go out for hotdogs when he's got this at home.

Posted by S. H. Pearson at 3:28 PM

Wednesday, January 9, 2013

This Time the World

In this fast-reading autobiography, George Lincoln Rockwell educates, awakens and entertains. You will be brought to laughter and tears by his eloquent pendulum. You can count on this book having been suppressed by his killers for decades. Rockwell exposes them by it.

He was a brilliant, albeit, secular man. A Navy Commander whose last fighter cockpit was in the F8F Bearcat. Oh hell yes. Top that all you ground-pounding New York rats. I dare you.

He was tall, talented, well-turned, well-bred and had all the right stuff. The only thing he lacked was a God-fearing soul. He charged into the fray of life banking only on his human abilities. Sometimes a man needs more. But I read in his words a hard leaning toward Jesus Christ. Rockwell was devoid of hatred. He was right as rain and good as gold. He sang the praises of Christians from a secular mind -- in that an honest man cannot deny the fruits of their tree. Rockwell was an honest man.

A virtuous man on his path to God with too many irons in the fire. Too many balls in the air. Too many wild dogs snapping at his heels when he wrote this book -- to "be still and know that I am God" as the Word says.

This can be seen by the way life knocked him around. He leapt out there, taking on the punches without a prayer. Just his guts and wit. His first wife was an ice queen. His second finally collapsed under the pressure of his persecution. He was survived by seven children.

After a surprisingly good childhood despite the Great Depression and a broken home, Rockwell entered Brown University in the fall of 1938.

A hurricane ravished the New England coast that year — tantamount to the covert, creeping communism. He fast learned that President Roosevelt was a traitor and a liar. And that Charlie Chaplin was a Marxist jew who changed his name from Israel Thonstein. Rockwell wrote that Chaplin "...is so red [that] even our pinko State Department has banned him from the U.S.A."

However, even an intellectual like Rockwell swallowed the lies about Hitler. When Roosevelt's jew-friendly war broke out, Rockwell rushed off to "come to the aid of his country." To save them from the evil Nazi's in a fratricidal war fanned up by the jews for the jews.

Headlong into the U.S. Navy. Back when "wooden ships and iron men" was still the motto. Rockwell got a kick out of military discipline. It was a good fit. He embraced the dangerous life of a Naval Aviator with zeal. Catapulted off USS OMAHA into blushing dawn. Dreams still in his head. Barely out of bed. Yonder lay blue Neptune kissing Aurora. Lip-lock to die for. Oh the sight of that. What a wake-up, aye, sailor-boy?

Five hours of wartime surveillance in an old prop-job with every drop of fuel measured to the mile. One mistake in his calculations and he goes the way of Amelia. Out here in the Fleet, it's all pass/fail baby. Saying nothing of trying to set 'er back down on a pitching, rolling deck, bleary-eyed, sapped and woozy. Can you find that little ship? Rockwell sure as hell did. The John F. Kennedy Navy hardened him for what would come later. And like Kennedy in those days, boy was he good-lookin'. Had his pick of the fillies too. His accounts of women will make you tingle. Where are men like that today? Where are the gentleman in choker whites? He was eighteen before he got his first kiss. A Victorian to the bone.

All this in a man whose home life provided no church. I can only imagine the spiritual edge that a good Catholic or Muslim upbringing would have given him.

Beautiful writing about his Navy days will bring you to your knees even if you never wore the blue. He puts you there — flying stick in an old recon bird over El Caribe. The adventures of which he would later recount to the "less heroic deck-apes." Lording it over the black-shoe Navy as they eagerly awaited reports from their pilots about what had been seen. "I ached for a carrier and a hotter plane with more combat..."

He longed for a brand new F4U Corsair, "at that time the hottest and deadliest thing in the air." Make me break out in a cold sweat, fly-boy. Dang that gull-wing thing. With a monstrous cowling and a monstrous prop. Surly blue to disappear into the sea. I long for one too.

But next it was off to Pensacola and the P-38 Lightning. Life gallops along at top speed. A wife is taken. A family emerges. The war ends. Civilian life begins.

In 1950 the Korean War recalls Rockwell as a Navy pilot. This time as an instructor in the F8F Bearcat. "The F8 is the hot-rod of the sky and how I loved it." He called it a bumble-bee. He called it a hornet. "It has so much power... It's like riding a lightning bolt."

About this time Rockwell learns about a Senator from Wisconsin named Joseph R. McCarthy. His awakening to the jewish problem thence began. It hit him like a tidal wave. As it does all of us. Just in time for Harry Truman to fire General Douglas McArthur, Rockwell's beloved hero. The jews hated both McCarthy and McArthur, smearing them in their character assassination rags. Hissing venom and vitriol, they shouted about how McArthur threatened to become another Hitler.

Rockwell wrote, "I found that Communism was not only Jewish, but the Jews boasted about its Jewishness in their books and papers!" His new mission had begun. Smitten with the clarion call of duty to rid our society of this menace who was "forcing integration on us, degrading our culture with their filthy art of chaos and pornography and, worst of all, spreading the disease of Communism..." Once Rockwell heard the speeches of Senator McCarthy, his fire was ignited. He tore into text like he did everything in life — like a tiger.

He devoured all the commie rags and mags. The Daily Worker, New Masses, the Library of Congress yielded up its hidden treasures. He learned how Communist jews planted their seeds in China before the 1949 overthrow of its government. He read Henry Ford's warnings from the 1920's. He read the Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion.

America was crawling with Communist spies in the 1950's (all jews). Some of whom were caught and hanged. I bet you won't read about them in the New York Times.

Rockwell writes that Jews were in charge of our atomic weapons and programs also. Leave it to Lyndon to undo what Kennedy did in forbidding the newly-formed jewish state a nuclear arsenal. Now look at the monster they have become.

All this Rockwell figured out before he got his hands on Mein Kampf. Like Henry Ford and DeWest Hooker, the blinders were off. He was wide awake, "I began to wonder why we had gone to war on the side of the Bolsheviks who had openly bragged for a hundred years of their plans to destroy us by force and violence, lies and subversion; while we completely wrecked Christian Germany, which never had a single highly-placed spy in our country..."

That was the pivot. That was the turning point. Then after he found a copy of Hitler's magnum opus tucked away in the back of a bookshop, the big picture emerged. "I could not lay the book down without agonies of impatience to get back to it. I read it walking to the squadron, I took it into the air and read it, propped up on the chartboard...circling over the desert. I read it on the Coronado Ferry. I read it into the night and resumed the next morning. ... I studied it, thought about it and wondered at the utter, indescribable genius of it."

And thus began Commander Rockwell's fever to fix what ails us. He tried doing this without a Nazi arm-band, but the news jews gave him no coverage. So he started the American Nazi Party knowing damn well that now they would. He drew fire from the jews something fierce. They do the usual thing they always do. Smear you in their crooked press. Wreck your job. Go after your marriage and family. Yadda yadda. If all that does not deter you then they pay someone to kill you.

Rockwell was picked off like Kennedy in 1967. Oh well. Better than dying in adult diapers at 97. His book survived just fine. In full Nazi garb, he was invited to speak at universities all over the country. These speeches were filmed for posterity and can now be seen on YouTube. Rockwell is all over the Internet. You can download a free copy of this book here: http://jrbooksonline.com/PDF\_Books/This\_Time\_the\_World.pdf

***

Posted by S. H. Pearson at

2:20 PM

Sunday, December 2, 2012

Mazen Dana +

"One-two-three-four, what are we fightin' for?" So the song went about the Vietnam debacle. It was not to keep commies out of Vietnam as you draftees and Marines were told. Since it was the commies who drafted you in the first place.

Vietnam had to be a distraction campaign. It gave the media jews something to write about whilst their organised partners in crime flew loads of heroin out of Cambodia under a convenient smoke screen. One of missiles, napalm, M-16 ratt-a-tatt and booby-trapped Howitzer shells. Keep your head down.

Sorry to un-validate your missing limbs. Sorry to un-validate your friends' names on that sunken wall in the DC dirt. Didn't it raise a question in your mind when you saw how they put a monument half way under ground? One that should be raised high for all to see? Get a clue. Most jewish mockery is subtle. They love to rub your nose in it while feigning sympathy. Right to your face. Right "in" your face.

They do it in their papers and magazines. They do it on TV. They do it on the sides of buses, in Time Square glitter, on billboards, everywhere, anywhere. Dare to escape their gaudy advertising, nose tweaks and derision.

This is aimed at the prick of our sarissa. Paratroopers, Marines, the SPECFOR attack dogs... You guys are the ones whom the jews sacrifice first. So listen up.

Your country has been commandeered by bolsheviks. They infest us from the inner sanctum of our government and call it "classified" so they can hide from us. Much of their energy is spent in subterfuge. They change names and addresses frequently. They are dug in like lice. And put your friends on ice. Knowing that it will rile you up and keep the fight going -- which ever one they drum up for the day.

Pick a war: WWI, WWII, Korea, Vietnam, Desert Storm, Iraq, Afghanistan... All jew-instigated wars for the benefit of jews. You pay with all you got. And they profit.

You pay with your limbs and lives. You pay by the sweat of your brow and in taxes. They tax you blind while charging eight dollars for a small bottle of laundry detergent at their swindling grocery stores. The ones who sell you wilted carrots, rotten apples and rotten freezer corn. Not because the corn got rotten somehow. It was frozen that way. They are getting you to "pay" for rotten produce at home. Swindling your pants off. America is practically bare-asst as I write.

So what do you think they've been doing with you guys in their fabricated wars?

For example, WWII was a big fat swindle. The bolsheviks (just like their next iteration, the israelis) sold the lie to all the world that Germans murdered millions of jews in death camps. When in fact it was the bolshevik jews who did exactly that to 66 million Christian Russians and Christian Ukrainians. So when the blue-eyed Nazi's came tanking into Russia early in the war, they were welcomed with open arms as saviours and deliverers. That was kept out of the news by the jews.

It has ever been a jewish tack to blame their own crimes on their victims or enemies. A shtick. A criminal modus operandi. It was the jews who massacred the intelligentsia of Poland in the forest of Katyn. Big mass grave. And then blamed it on the Germans. It was the jews who massacred Armenians and blamed it on the Turks.

It was the jews who engineered and committed 9/11, blaming it on fabricated terrorists of the Muslim stripe. Thereby kicking off their panted-after wars against their Middle Eastern neighbors.

Nothing they did in Iraq could stand the light of day. So they threatened to kill independent journalists who tried to report on it.

Mazen Dana, the Reuters videographer, is an example of this. In an article from Felicity Arbuthnot, Dana found U.S. troops covered in plastic bags in remote desert areas. He put it on video. A few days before his death of U.S. military bullets, Dana told his brother that he discovered a mass grave full of U.S. soldiers in Iraq. So this begs the question of what really happened to all those Vietnam "MIA's." "Missing in action" may be another way of saying "buried in a mass grave and forgotten." Is it what you do when you don't want the folks back home to know how many were killed in action? You could label them "missing in action" and bury them secretly for better war PR.

The kicker is how our military are brainwashed and duped enough to not only die for these jews, but to shoot journalists who are trying to report on how many of them die.

"Missing in action" appears to be another jewish lie. They don't want you to know how many of our soldiers die. But they tell you every five minutes that Hitler killed six million jews.

Hitler was a Catholic. Do the spiritual math. What Catholic soul wants to face down his Maker with the blood of six million on his hands? That's something the jews conveniently gloss over. Hitler was a God-fearing, Christian man. His forces wore belt buckles inscribed with "Gott mit uns." That's German for "God is with us."

Recall the painting of George Washington kneeling in the snow next to his horse. He was praying the same prayer to the same God for the same reason. Their Cause was just. Their foe, the same.

Don't fall for the jewish blame game. Ask yourself, "who were the British" that Paul Revere was warning his countrymen about? Who was the wire-puller behind the Crown in 1775 that landed on these shores to make war on us? Could it be the same wire-puller who financed the bolsheviks in Russia?

And Castro in Cuba? And writes the lies in all your papers?

***

Posted by S. H. Pearson at

10:00 PM

Friday, November 9, 2012

So what?

So the Iranians shot down a drone. So what? There's no pilot in them. That cowardly son-of-a-bitch is sitting at a desk somewhere. Flying his video game from a keyboard. Americans should follow suit if they want any privacy. Our skies are peppered with surveillance drones. And have been for years. Tilt your binoculars up for a change. Some of these things are wingless and try to pass for stars. During the day they dodge and duck into clouds when you're glassing them. They have the same telephoto sensors on them as other nefarious aircraft. While you're watching TV, your commie government is watching you from a low-orbit platform (google Sky Mouse S. H. Pearson) So hip-hip for Iran. The zionist picadors are pricking at Iran, trying to kick-off another war. Like they hunt and harass American journalists who publish the "real news." Predictable provocations of the jews.

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2012/11/09/iran-fired-on-drone-us-violatedairspace\_n\_2100446.html?cid=maingrid7%7Cmaing5%7Cdl1%7Csec1\_Ink3%26pLid%3D232391

***

Posted by S. H. Pearson at

10:04 AM

Thursday, August 30, 2012

Formulaic

The following is "what I believe." And is worth your digestion.

The wacko shooters in our recent past all bear a formulaic shtick. They come busting into some crowded place and open fire. Then claim to be insane or get suddenly dead (we are told by the jewish news media but have no proof that they are, in fact, dead). Let us put into this mix the lurid blood bath freaks who hit, run and get away with it. And the "lone nut" stalkers.

Some of these guys were just decoys. Not the real boys.

Amazing how fast some of these names slip out of your memories, no? And how some of them are a flashbulb memory:

Sirhan Sirhan, David Chapman, James Holmes (yeah right), Lee Harvey Oswald, Seung-Hui Cho, Derrick Bird, John Patrick Bedell, Jed R. Waits, Roger Troy, University of Alabama female "gunman" (12 Feb 2010), the Pastor Carol Daniels kill squad (2009), Tate/LaBianca kill squad (1969), Terry J. Sedlacek shot a preacher (2009), Robert Stewart opened fire in a nursing home (2009), trailer park kill squad in Brunswick, Georgia (eight murdered in 2009), Alabama "gunman" kills ten on aimless rampage (Samson, 2009), two Virginia Tech students found slain in forest (2009), Kuwait 2009 -- incendiary bomb in a Muslim wedding tent (35 women, six children).

Boy, 2009 was a bizzy year for the mystery kill squad. This is what I call "domestic terrorism" if it happens in the USA. And they dare accuse Christian traditionalists of being "potential domestic terrorists?" Christian traditionalists don't have a single dead body to their name. "By their fruits you shall know them." Let this be said of our Muslim Brethren also.

In the recent case of womb'lings hacked to death and used as "terror" against Burmese Muslims by zionist-aligned buddhists -- that is an old shtick too.

According to my studies, the 6th prime minster of israel employed similar tactics during his rampages with the Stern Gang. A month and some days before the inception of "israel the jewish state," Irgun terrorist Menachim Begin participated in ripping live babies from the wombs of Palestinians. These unborn, murdered babies were used to traumatize remaining villagers of Deir Yassin, encouraging them to flee their homes. That was in 1948.

Talk about a shtick -- in 2008 I read an article in the Miami Herald about then-recent Palestinian immigrants to Chile. They were "stock formula" refugees. The Herald quoted them, saying that they fled Palestine in terror of having seen their neighbors killed in front of them. By "guess who?" The Herald did not identify the killers. They used pronouns throughout the text. As if the local Cubans were too dense to figure it out. Oh Herald, never underestimate the brilliance of a Cubano. Nor the marksmanship. El Presidio is still fresh on his mind. And don't you commie bitches forget it. According to the Miami Herald, Chile welcomed these terrorized Palestinian Muslims warmly. Let this be another Jewel in our Crown.

Terrorism is a manipulation to get people to do what you want. I have to quote the Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion here, "Put a little blood in the streets, and people will do anything you want." Keep in mind that it has ever been the shtick of a certain group to commit a crime and then point the finger at someone else -- often a false flag target.

***

Posted by S. H. Pearson at

12:18 PM

Monday, August 27, 2012

Rill

You common, low-life trashy bastards.

Yeah.

I got a rill for you.

<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=7AIE1vz9OB0>

Posted by S. H. Pearson at

8:59 AM

Tuesday, August 21, 2012

Meth

Can you believe that your computer's dictionary gives the chemical formula for this stuff? --  $C_6H_5CH_2CH(CH_3)NH(CH_3)$  - this from the same brotherhood who guards knowledge like the hounds of hell?

Wikipedia writes as though this life-wrecking synthetic is a medicine used to "treat" undesirable conditions of the mind and body. The Wiki goes on for miles in a "comprehensive" how-to. How to make it and how to take it. They go so far as to write how one can shove it up his *** for a longer lasting high.

Yeah the Wiki is a piece of work. Mister 9:11's insidious, covert, sneaky, back-door defiler. Teaching little kids how to say dirty words and be a kinky pervert by the time they hit middle school. If they see a new word scrawled in the school bus dust, Wikipedia is sure to have a "comprehensive" how-to manual written about it. Complete with instructional drawings. Damn skippy.

So let's call the spade. Crystal Meth Amphetamine is as much of a disease in our society as cell phone pornography. One can walk through a cemetery and find friends not so old who just couldn't leave the stuff alone.

You recall John Belushi. He was like that with cocaine. And like cocaine, methamphetamine is a kick in the pants. It can turn a couch-frump into a dynamo in one snort. Playing on one's ego. Sudden life-of-the-party.

The phenomenon is short-lived, however. Hard and fast wrecking ball to health. Priceless, precious health. Who doesn't value it? Who doesn't want it? Healthy people don't need doctors. Think about it. Healthy people feel good and enjoy natural energy. They got a Colgate smile. Pink, firm gums. Strong choppers. Dense bones. They feel "tremblingly alive."

Instead of building you up, speed breaks you down. Hey bozo - I don't have to tell you to wake up do I? You're speeding.

LSD is speed-based. Will keep you wide-awake for 24 hours. They put poison in it to make you see things that are not there. Arsenic. The operative for hallucinations is poison. That is why peyote buds and jimson weed make you see things that are not there. They are poison plants.

Poison on this side of "lethal dose" will make you hallucinate before it kills you - which it eventually does. The brain, which interprets ocular stimuli, begins to malfunction something fierce. Which makes me question what is currently going on in "nursing homes." I go walking down the halls and am clasped by people in wheel chairs who tell me things like, "there's a man sitting on my lap and he won't go away." What kind of daily drugs are they feeding these people? I asked a nurse sitting behind a nearby desk and she nervously told me that they were not allowed to discuss medications. I bet they aren't. Medicine is now a secret. Why do you think that is? They call it "HIPAA."

Yeah drugs are a scourge. Any of them we take for "medical" purposes come with side-effects. Sometimes the side-effects outweigh the benefits. Drugs are not natural.

In our fabulous bodies the Engineer designed an endocrine system. A natural pharmacy of glandular secretions that port into the bloodstream whatever the body needs at the moment. Adrenaline, endorphins, estrogen, testos-terone...

During the nubile years of a woman, for example, hormones dictate much of her physical function and behaviour. To rise above these monthly rhythms, supernatural intervention is required. Hence the difference between a Holy Sister and a home-wrecker. Or a Holy Sister and that Mossad skank who seduced and murdered Mr. Hamas.

Synthetic speed and the opium poppy should not be clumped together. I believe the Chief made opium poppies for Navy Corpsmen. For when Marines step on booby-trapped Howitzer shells. Or false-flag bucket bombs. Aye, Mr. Nettanyahoo?

"I believe" that the same sons-of-bitches who keep marijuana illegal are the men behind crystal methamphetamine. And every bottle of hard stuff distilled. The same satanic bastards who fly heroin and cocaine over here by the tanker loads.

"I believe" these men are part of the 9:11 collective. All part of the swarm of locusts that produce movies like Spun. A cultish youth flick glamourizing methamphetamine. How sexy it is. How swank and happenin' it is. How if you abuse this drug, you too can be swank and sexy. And if you decide to become a meth cook, you'll be an all American hero like Mickey Roarke in his cowboy hat. Built like a brick shit-house, fearless and seminal.

Oh boy. Now quick – everybody run out and start making this stuff so you can make a fortune and be a desirable chick-magnet like the ageless, cosmetically-enhanced Mickey Roarke.

If you check the stats, you will find that after this movie (Spun) hit the streets, crystal meth took off like a rocket. Particularly among the unlettered, low income folks.

Whoever wrote the script to this movie should be burned at the stake Catholic-style. Like every man who had a hand in 9/11. Along with every stick of Israeli terrorism since their counterfeit inception. Hanging is reserved for lesser criminals, you sons-of-jackals.

***

Posted by S. H. Pearson at

12:10 PM

Older PostsHome

Subscribe to: Posts \(Atom\)

Blog Archive

▼ 2013(2)

▼ April(1)

Smearing Kennedy

▶ January(1)

▶ 2012(8)

▶ December(1)

▶ November(1)

▶ August(3)

▶ June(1)

▶ May(1)

▶ March(1)

▶ 2011(14)

▶ October(2)

▶ August(2)

▶ July(1)

▶ June(5)

▶ March(1)

▶ February(1)

▶ January(2)

▶ 2010(29)

▶ December(1)

▶ November(1)

▶ October(2)

▶ September(1)

▶ August(3)

▶ July(2)

▶ June(5)

▶ May(4)

▶ April(1)

▶ March(1)

▶ February(4)

▶ January(4)

After Failed Negotiations, Iran Weighs a Nuclear "Breakout"

Lt. Col. (ret.) Michael Segall, Jerusalem issue Brief, Vol. 13, No. 9 1 May 2013

Iran already has the necessary technological capability to produce at least one nuclear bomb. Iran is actually a short way from the red line, and crossing it is a matter of deciding. Under current geostrategic conditions, it does not appear that Iran intends to give up its nuclear activity; instead, it is waiting for the right moment to "break out."

* Iran is positioning itself as a leading regional actor and emphasizes its lack of dependence on external actors in energy, military, economic, and other areas. As Iran assesses that, given the regional changes, the traditional tools (terror, subversion, export of the revolution) will no longer suffice to promote its goals of regional hegemony and guaranteeing its survival, Iran is drawing closer to a decision on going nuclear.

* It draws encouragement from the stance of Russia, which, as a member of the Security Council and hence of the 5+1 group, helps Iran by thwarting any unified Western position on either the nuclear or Syrian issues.

* For Iran, the passage of time means there will no longer be a need for negotiations. Iran will continue its foot-dragging tactics, hinting to the West that it has to wait until the election results, and the formation of a new government, before continuing the nuclear talks (even though the government has no real say on the nuclear issue). The West, for its part, will apparently go along and wait for another "last opportunity," and the futile dance that has gone on for a decade will continue without any Western successes and with Iranian technological accomplishments that bring it ever closer to its goal.

Iran Getting Closer to Military Nuclear Capability

In April, Iran celebrated its National Nuclear Day just after the failed second round of nuclear talks with the 5+1 group in Almaty, Kazakhstan. The talks' failure again revealed the dead-end reached by the present Iranian-Western nuclear negotiations channel. It also once again demonstrated that there are actually two parallel processes in motion.

On one side is Iran's foot-dragging in the talks – the first round in Kazakhstan was held after almost a year's intermission – and their repeated failure; on the other is Iran's ongoing progress in developing its technological capabilities in the nuclear domain. This progress is bringing Iran close to a point where it will be able to achieve its goal of a military nuclear capability. It will do so when it chooses, subject to the full range of its strategic political considerations, which are a main component of the decision-making process in Tehran – especially in light of the changes in the geostrategic environment and its assessments of threats and opportunities.

All Options on the Table

The West is mainly pressuring Iran through sanctions on its oil industry, exacting a high price in the form of considerably reduced exports and revenue. Tehran, for its part, is pressuring the West through persistent technological progress in the critical aspects of its nuclear program – regarding both uranium enrichment (involving mining, conversion, enrichment, and apparently also the military components of its nuclear program) and plutonium (involving heavy-water enrichment at its IR-40 reactor in Arak). In this way Iran displays a symmetrical response to the West's "all options on the table" declarations.

Iran is thereby signaling that if the West refuses to honor its key demand for recognition of its "legitimate right to nuclear energy for peaceful purposes," it will enact this right itself, deploying the issue of 20-percent enrichment as an example.

Rights and Sanctions

After the first round of nuclear talks in Kazakhstan, Iran expressed optimism about the talks' future.

However, after a further meeting in Turkey and the second round in Kazakhstan, it put the onus for failure on the West, while repeatedly stressing the need to recognize its right to nuclear energy and to remove the sanctions. The chairman of the National Security and Foreign Policy Committee of the Majlis, Alaeddin Boroujerdi, asserted that in the "nuclear game, Iran has achieved all its goals including enrichment and nuclear knowledge, while the West has not achieved its goal – stopping Iran's enrichment, so Iran is the winner of the nuclear game and the Western states will be forced one day to accept the nuclear reality in Iran."<sup>2</sup> He also reiterated that "Achievement of nuclear rights is Iran's strategic and permanent policy, and its guidelines as specified by Khamenei, and the path of its progress will not come to a halt or be altered due to the change of government" (after the presidential election in Iran on June 14). He reiterated, "The leaders of the negotiating countries, especially the Americans, should know that Iran's nuclear dossier and elections are two separate issues." Boroujerdi advised the U.S. and other world powers negotiating with Tehran not to wait for the results of the June presidential election, and said that would be a "mistaken calculation."<sup>3</sup> Abbas Araqchi, Deputy Foreign Minister and a member of the negotiating team, revealed, "The Iranian delegation in the talks was ready to continue negotiations until a final agreement was reached, but it was the opposite side (the 5+1 group) that apparently lacked the necessary readiness and permission from their capitals." He added that the 5+1 paused the negotiations, anticipating a possible change in Tehran's nuclear stance following the upcoming June presidential elections, and stressed that Tehran's position is irrevocable and is not influenced by domestic politics. Araqchi concluded by saying that Iran was ready to move on two paths to strike a deal with the 5+1. The first involves continued talks in the form of step-by-step, confidence-building measures, which is the 5+1's choice but is long and time-consuming. The other path is a shortcut, in which the world powers recognize Iran's "legitimate rights, especially uranium enrichment, avoiding hostile moves, and lifting sanctions to reach results rapidly." He further added that Iran was ready to move on either path, although it prefers the second option. He expressed the hope that the 5+1 would grasp a correct understanding of Iran's proposals and return to the talks with a positive approach.<sup>4</sup>

Just as in previous failed rounds Iran threatened to withdraw from the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), Boroujerdi said that if the West did not show a commitment to such issues as cutting back on nuclear weapons and did not recognize Iran's nuclear rights, the Majlis would again consider the option of scrapping the NPT.

Iran does not accept that it must respect the provisions of the NPT, while America and the West may ignore Article 6, 5. and Article 4, 6. Boroujerdi continued: "In such a case, there is no longer any reason for Iran to be a member of the NPT, and the Majlis can review this matter....We cannot be indifferent to the pressure the Iranian nation is facing; of course, this is a strategic decision that the Supreme National Security Council (SNSC) must adopt, but the Majlis will use all of its abilities to defend the rights of the nation."<sup>7</sup>

Iran and the West

The Iranian press plays an important role in covering the nuclear talks and preparing public opinion for a possible confrontation with the West over the nuclear program. Generally, there is a certain consistency between the words of the leadership and the nuclear negotiators, on the one hand, and editorials in the Iranian press, on the other.

After the talks failed, an editorial in the newspaper Jomhourī Eslami – headlined "Wherein Lies the Problem of the Nuclear Talks?" – shed light on Iran's stance, its rationale for its conduct, and its propaganda line during the talks: "The main question is wherein lies the obstacle in the talks between Iran and the West that have not succeeded to remove [this obstacle] after ten rounds? To find a convincing answer to these questions, it is important to pay attention to two issues: the sanctions and the interpretation of the right to nuclear energy for peaceful purposes."

The editorial continued, stating that the sides' positions on these issues precluded reaching minimal agreement in past talks, and it does not appear likely that future talks can succeed unless the impediments are removed. The Western states and the 5+1 countries are, for their own reasons, imposing economic sanctions on Iran whose purpose is to change the behavior and positions of the government and the people. Khamenei in his recent speech in Mashhad referred to this objective, which involves pressuring the regime by creating a rift between it and the people. Presumably, those imposing the sanctions think they must keep doing so until they achieve the goals they have set. That is, so long as the West does not see the Iranian people capitulate, it will continue on its path. Thus, during the two rounds of talks in Almaty, the Western side stressed the need to continue the talks but did not agree to cancel or diminish the sanctions; the Iranian team, for its part, did not accept the West's demands.

A further issue is the two sides' differing interpretations of the right to nuclear energy. The Iranian side maintains that Iran's NPT membership, and the fact that the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) can supervise its nuclear facilities, means its nuclear activity is for peaceful purposes. Hence, the secretary of Iran's Supreme National Security Council has again underlined that the problem is not the percentage of enrichment but rather the acceptance of Iran's basic right to atomic energy.

The 5+1 states view this right from a fundamentally different perspective. They do not see NPT membership and IAEA supervision as sufficient to prove the peaceful intentions of Iran's nuclear activity, and they pose additional demands that cause disagreement and the talks' inability to be fruitful. On this issue the Western states must abandon their strict interpretation of NPT membership and accept the regular practice, the editorial said.

Jomhourī Eslami summed up:

Arriving at a common interpretation of the right to nuclear activity and amending the method of using sanctions against Iran constitute the main key to ending the stalemate in the nuclear talks. But this is an optimistic viewpoint. Another viewpoint is that the West, and particularly the United States, are engaging in dual, ambiguous behavior in their nuclear policy, and the clear example of this is that they enable the Zionist regime to maintain hundreds of atomic warheads in the heart of the sensitive region of the Middle East while denying Iran even its legal right to nuclear activity for peaceful purposes! In light of this dual policy, it is impossible to give credence to the West.<sup>8</sup>

Hasin Shariatmadari, editor of Kayhan, which expresses the view of Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei, wrote on his website and in an editorial in the newspaper that the latest round of talks proves that "the West does not really want to reach a solution and is not sincere in its intentions toward Iran." According to Shariatmadari, the failure does not stem from any lack of talent of the Iranian negotiating teams, but rather from the different goals each side wants to achieve. Iran, he suggests, is striving to prove that its nuclear program is meant for peaceful purposes, while the West is not really seeking to solve the nuclear issue but instead wants to leave it open so that it can continue its struggle against Iran and leave the sanctions in place. Shariatmadari adds that this situation – in effect, a closing of the nuclear file – actually constitutes an acknowledgment of Iran’s victory and steadfast position over the years. In conclusion, Shariatmadari proposes increasing the media presence at the talks so as to highlight the real intentions of the West.<sup>9</sup>

A Growing Awareness

The West, and especially the United States, is aware of Iran’s gradual progress toward a military nuclear capability despite the sanctions and the price they are exacting. American spokespersons have emphasized this capability in hearings before the Senate Intelligence Committee. Particularly notable is the testimony of National Intelligence Director James R. Clapper, who on March 12, <sup>10</sup>. and again on April 18 addressed the status of Iran’s nuclear program and its regional aspirations:

Iran continues to develop technical expertise in uranium enrichment, nuclear reactors, weaponization and ballistic missiles, from which it could draw if it decides to build missile-deliverable weapons, nuclear weapons. Clearly, Tehran has the scientific, technical and industrial capacity to produce them, so the central issue is its political will to do so. Such a decision, we believe, will be made by the Supreme Leader, and at this point we don’t know if he’ll eventually decide to build nuclear weapons. In Iran, leaders are exploiting the unrest in the Arab world to spread influence and to undermine the United States and our allies. But Tehran also faces a worsening financial outlook in the fall of the

Assad regime and Syria would be a huge strategic loss for Iran....Russia will continue to resist putting more international pressure on Syria or Iran.<sup>11</sup>

National Nuclear Day

Those words are consistent with Iran’s accelerating nuclear activity on the ground, in blatant defiance of the West. It is indicative that Iran’s National Nuclear Day (April 9) came right after the second round of nuclear talks in Almaty (April 6-7). It is unlikely that the relevant actors in the West even noticed the proximity of these dates and the propaganda trap that Iran had laid for them.

National Nuclear Day offered a convenient stage for Iran’s leaders and the heads of its nuclear program to highlight Iran’s achievements in the nuclear field and its independence in continuing the program without regard for Western concerns. Senior figures made much of this independence and the ability to make headway in the program, while lauding the technological advancements and propaganda value associated with the program. President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad – who apparently, as he reaches the end of his tenure, has been relieved of dealing with the nuclear issue – declared in a Nuclear Day speech that the peoples of the world must be aware of the great potential that lies in nuclear energy in all areas of life and not allow the world’s wealth to be limited to any particular group of states [i.e., the West]....There are those who are interested in exclusive possession of this energy, the same ones who have produced a nuclear bomb themselves and acted against humanity, who seize ownership of the technologies, and also seek to prevent the Iranian people from gaining access to nuclear technology.

He emphasized that the Iranian people had stood firm and nevertheless attained such technology: “Can anyone deny us this? You [Western countries] made every effort to prevent Iran from going nuclear, but Iran did go nuclear, and now you are trying to take it away from Iran.”<sup>12</sup>

As part of the Nuclear Day events, Iran inaugurated some nuclear projects related to the uranium-enrichment process: uranium extraction from natural resources at the Saghand Uranium Complex in Ardakan, and an additional facility for uranium conversion, the Yellowcake Production Complex.<sup>13</sup> The head of the Atomic Energy Organization of Iran (AEOI), Fereydon Abbasi, affirmed that “Iran is looking for uranium resources to provide the fuel needs for its operating [nuclear] reactors or those set to be built in the future.”<sup>14</sup>

In a special interview for Nuclear Day, Abbasi noted Iran’s principal achievements in various fields. He stressed the installation of new generations of centrifuges,<sup>15</sup> the ongoing uranium enrichment at levels of 3.5 percent and 20 percent that are required for operating Iran’s reactors, and the continuing R&D on even more advanced generations of centrifuges. These could enable Iran to enrich uranium at the nuclear-weapon level in a shorter time span. Abbasi likewise pointed to the ongoing preparations to activate the 40-megawatt heavy-water reactor that will also enable Iran to progress in its military nuclear program along the plutonium track.<sup>16</sup>

In interviews he gave subsequently, Abbasi reemphasized that at present Iran indeed does not have plans to enrich uranium to a level above 20 percent. But if such a need arose in the future, “for example, for ships and submarines, if our researchers need to have a stronger underwater presence, we will have to make small engines that should be fueled by 45% to 56% enriched uranium....In that case, we might need this [highly enriched] fuel.”<sup>17</sup> In a closed meeting, Abassi also updated the Majlis on the latest nuclear developments.18

The Revolutionary Guards: Destroy Tel Aviv and Haifa

On April 18, which was Iranian Army Day, spokesmen of the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC) and the army belittled Western threats that "all options are on the table," saying this was propaganda for domestic purposes aimed at the media and public opinion in the United States and Israel. The spokesmen also warned against "stupid acts" by Israel (i.e., attacking Iran's nuclear facilities) and again emphasized their readiness to carry out the Supreme Leader's orders and annihilate Tel Aviv and Haifa should Iran be attacked.19 IRGC commander Mohammad Ali Jafari again warned that the security of the world's energy reserves is in the IRGC's hands and that "the enemies of the Islamic Revolution cannot ensure these sources" since the IRGC controls the main lanes for energy supplies in the Persian Gulf.20

The Nuclear Issue in Iran's Elections

The nuclear issue is playing a leading role in Iran's presidential race and is a focus of contenders' claims and counterclaims. For example, one contender, Hasan Rowhani, a senior member of the Expediency Council (head of its Center for Strategic Research) and a former nuclear negotiator, observed critically that at the time he served as head of the negotiating team, Iran's situation was much better and "the citizens can feel this difference and make the necessary comparison." Rowhani pointed out that in those days Iran was not close to war, the Iranian nuclear file issue was nowhere near the Security Council, and no resolutions against Iran had been adopted.21

Another possible presidential contender, Ali Akbar Velayati, a former foreign minister who today serves as Khamenei's adviser on international affairs, asserted that, in the past, "Iran had tried to suspend uranium-enrichment activities during both the reformist government and the present government at the Supreme Leader's behest. However, the West did not act honestly toward Iran or respond to its demands." In that period, he added, Iran had agreed to a suspension to prove to the world and the West, as well as the Iranian public, that retreating in the face of enemies, and of the West, is not effective. Therefore, according to the Leader's decree, it was decided to continue Iran's activity in the nuclear sphere within the framework of the NPT.22

At the same time, the failure of the latest round of talks, and the fact that a military clash with the West is becoming a real possibility, seems to be intensifying the domestic debates about continuing to seek a diplomatic solution to the crisis. These debates, however, are not affecting Iran's technological progress in the nuclear field, its growing defiance of the West, or the projection of its power toward its neighbors in the Gulf (particularly Bahrain).

Iran Nears the Moment of Decision

Iran already has the necessary technological capability to produce at least one nuclear bomb. Even if the reports are accurate that it has stopped uranium enrichment of 20 percent and not exceeded 250 kilograms of enriched uranium, which by Israeli assessments is the critical mass beyond which Iran could produce a bomb, thanks to its technological capabilities, Iran could in a short time enrich (possibly even clandestinely) the necessary amounts of uranium for a bomb. Iran is actually a short way from the red line, and crossing it is a matter of deciding.

Under current geostrategic conditions, it does not appear that Iran intends to give up its nuclear activity; instead, it is waiting for the right moment to "break out." Iran has already made clear to the West that crossing the threshold is no longer a technological problem, just an issue of weighing considerations and reaching a decision. Iran is positioning itself as a leading regional actor and emphasizes its lack of dependence on external actors in energy, military, economic, and other areas.

Moreover, in the new Middle Eastern reality that is taking shape, Iran has a message for Arab states that are undergoing change: to follow the model of its own steadfast resilience against Western pressure since the outbreak of the revolution. It draws encouragement from the stance of Russia, which, as a member of the Security Council and hence of the 5+1 group, helps Iran by thwarting any unified Western position on either the nuclear or Syrian issues.

In the window of time that remains until Iran's presidential elections, it does not appear that a breakthrough will occur in the negotiations. For Iran, the passage of time means there will no longer be a need for such negotiations. Iran will continue its foot-dragging tactics, hinting to the West that it has to wait until the election results, and the formation of a new government, before continuing the nuclear talks (even though the government has no real say on the nuclear issue). The West, for its part, will apparently go along and wait for another "last opportunity," and the futile dance that has gone on for a decade will continue without any Western successes and with Iranian technological accomplishments that bring it ever closer to its goal.

In the environment taking shape in the overall Middle East after the upheavals of the "Arab Spring," Iran is trying to position itself as the main power broker that can affect the course of events and reduce American influence and involvement in the region via Washington's allies among the Gulf states, particularly Qatar and Saudi Arabia. Those two, especially Iran's bitter Sunni rival Saudi Arabia, are gradually, with Western assistance, weakening Iran's position in Syria, with all that entails for Iran's continued ability to influence the Syrian-Lebanese arena and, from it, to project force toward Israel. Moreover, the strengthening of Islamist Sunni actors in the area adds more fuel to the Sunni-Shiite conflict, with Iran's creation of Hizbullah already deeply involved in the crisis on Syrian soil and suffering losses. In addition, Iran regards the growing Western military aid, particularly the missile-defense umbrellas for the Gulf States and Israel, and possibly also Turkey, as a mounting threat.

Iran perceives both external and domestic threats affecting the regime's survivability, while also seeing a range of opportunities opened by the "Arab Spring" or "Islamic awakening," as Iran calls it. Thus, Iran keeps developing its military nuclear program, bringing it close to the point where it would be able to assemble a nuclear bomb in a very short time – despite Western pressure and sanctions.

Both American and Iranian interests in the Persian Gulf and the Middle East, in general, are undergoing processes of change that put them on a collision course. One side's perceived threat is the other side's perceived opportunity. In Iran's view, leaving the nuclear file open is part of the U.S. strategy to contain Iran's influence in the region, and Washington has no real interest in reaching a settlement. As that outlook gains strength in Iran, along with the assessment that, given the present circumstances and regional changes, the traditional tools (terror, subversion, export of the revolution) will no longer suffice to promote its goals of regional hegemony and guaranteeing its survival, Iran is drawing closer to a decision on going nuclear.

* * *

Notes

1. <http://www.farsnews.com/plarg.php?nn=375832&st=758527>
2. <http://www.mehrnews.com/detail/News/2030259>
3. <http://english.farsnews.com/newstext.php?nn=9107163350>
4. Ibid.
5. NPT Treaty, Article 6: "Each of the Parties to the Treaty undertakes to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament, and on a Treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control."
<http://www.fas.org/nuke/control/npt/text/npt2.htm>
6. NPT Treaty, Article 4: "Nothing in this Treaty shall be interpreted as affecting the inalienable right of all the Parties to the Treaty to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with articles I and II of this Treaty."
<http://www.fas.org/nuke/control/npt/text/npt2.htm>
7. <http://www.farsnews.com/newstext.php?nn=13920118001351>
8. http://www.jomhourieslami.com/1392/13920119/13920119\_01\_jomhori\_ismisar\_magaleh\_0001.html\_10
9. <http://hshariatmadari.blogfa.com/post-267.aspx>
10. <http://www.intelligence.senate.gov/130312/clapper.pdf>
11. <http://www.dni.gov/files/documents/Intelligence%20Reports/SASC%20WWT%20Remarks%20as%20delivered%2018%20April%202013.pdf>
12. <http://president.ir/fa/46774>
13. <http://www.farsnews.com/newstext.php?nn=13920120000052>;
<http://news.irib.ir/NewsPage.aspx?newsid=28851>
14. <http://tinyurl.com/ceb3v62>
15. <http://www.presstv.ir/detail/2013/03/04/291818/iran-building-3000-highend-centrifuges/>
16. <http://tinyurl.com/bqzqz6g> (ISNA)
17. <http://tinyurl.com/ceb3v62> (ISNA)
18. <http://www.farsnews.com/newstext.php?nn=13920121000113>

19. <http://www.farsnews.com/newstext.php?nn=13920129000221>;
<http://www.mehrnews.com/detail/News/2035213>;
<http://www.resalatnews.com/fa/?code=136943>;
<http://www.kayhan.ir/920114/3.htm#oter300>;
<http://www.leader.ir/langs/fa/index.php?p=bayanat&id=10497>
20. <http://www.farsnews.com/newstext.php?nn=13920128001005>
21. <http://khabaronline.ir/detail/285775/politics/nuclear>
22. <http://www.rahesabz.net/story/68499/>

* * *

IDF Lt.-Col. (ret.) Michael (Mickey) Segall, an expert on strategic issues with a focus on Iran, terrorism, and the Middle East, is a senior analyst at the Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs and the Terrorence Company.

This Jerusalem Issue Brief is available online at:
<http://www.icpa.org>

Dore Gold, Publisher; Amb. Alan Baker, ICA Director; Mark Ami-El, Managing Editor. Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs (Registered Amuta), 13 Tel-Hai St., Jerusalem, Israel; Tel. 972-2-561-9281, Fax. 972-2-561-9112, Email: icpa@netvision.net.il.

In U.S.A.: Center for Jewish Community Studies, 7 Church Lane, Suite 9, Baltimore, MD 21208; Tel. 410-653-7779; Fax 410-653-8889. Website: www.icpa.org.

© Copyright. The opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the Board of Fellows of the Jerusalem Center for Public Affairs.

The Institute for Contemporary Affairs (ICA) is dedicated to providing a forum for Israeli policy discussion and debate.

To subscribe to the Jerusalem Issue Brief list, please send a blank email message to: brief4-subscribe@icpa.org

To unsubscribe from the Jerusalem Issue Brief list, please send a blank email message to: brief4-unsubscribe@icpa.org

Neo-Nazi 'The Skull' is Pauline Hanson's biggest fan

By: Candace Sutton, news.com.au, May 03, 2013 12:00AM

Neo-Nazi says he will help re-elect Pauline Hanson He says they are "bloody good" friends Hanson says she doesn't support his racist opinions

AUSTRALIA'S best known neo-Nazi, Ross "The Skull" May, has claimed that right wing politician Pauline Hanson supports a white Australia and shares his extremist views.

May, who has met Hanson on several occasions and claims she "likes a cuddle" says "Pauline is a bloody good friend" and he will be "supporting her the best I can" in her bid to be re-elected to Federal Parliament in September.

Pauline Hanson and Ross 'The Skull' May. Picture: Facebook Source: Supplied

Ms Hanson, who was previously embroiled in a scandal over connections between her former party, One Nation, and the white supremacist group, the Ku Klux Klan, agrees she knows May but says she does not support his racist opinions.

"I know he's a big supporter of the white Australia policy (but) that doesn't mean I support it. I don't," she told news.com.au. "People have claimed to be associated with me. These people cling to you."

The Skull, who says he is proud to be a neo-Nazi in 2013, is the now defunct Australian National Socialist Party's most notorious member.

In the 1970s he was a fit, shaven-headed "stormtrooper" dressed in Nazi uniform, who threatened and assaulted opponents, for which he served several stints in jail.

He was jailed for throwing eggs at feminist Germaine Greer, fined $400 for writing "Kill all Jews" on a Brisbane Jewish memorial, and campaigned against Gough Whitlam in 1974, while dressed in Nazi regalia.

Ross "the Skull" May. Source: news.com.au

These days, he lives in Sydney's west, wears a Pauline Hanson t-shirt and posts his extremist views on a Facebook page which has a photograph of himself with Hanson as its main picture.

Now a supporter of the ultra right Australia First Party, May's radical ideas include blowing refugee boats "out of the water".

While Ms Hanson distanced herself from May, she said refugees were a problem for ordinary Australians.

"We are looking after refugees' health care and housing, cigarettes and international phone calls," she said. "Australians are hurting as far as job security goes, as far as keeping on paying their bills."

She said Prime Minister Julia Gillard's government was "putting the country further into debt" and "the refugee question has to be addressed".

Ms Hanson will announce next month which lower house seat she plans to stand for as an independent in the federal election.

She said it would be between the seats of Blair, Wright and Oxley in Queensland and Hunter in NSW.

Ms Hanson formerly held the seat of Oxley as an independent, and then as the leader of the One Nation Party, before losing it in 1998.

In 1999, after David Palmer, the "Imperial Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan in Australia", claimed he had infiltrated the party, Hanson was forced to expel party member, Robert Leys, who claimed he was a Grand Titan of the so-called Australian Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, and Peter Coleman, the alleged Australian organiser of the Imperial Klans of America.

Neo-Nazi Ross 'The Skull' May, pictured standing, in the 1970s.

Source: News Limited

<http://www.news.com.au/national-news/neo-nazi-the-skull-is-paulinehansonbiggestfan/storyfcvnr21226633236242#ixzz2SD9vqrUL>

*** FROM THE ARCHIVES ***

General George S. Patton was assassinated to silence his criticism of allied war leaders claims new book George S. Patton, America's greatest combat general of the Second World War, was assassinated after the conflict with the connivance of US leaders, according to a new book.

By Tim Shipman in Washington, 7:16PM GMT 20 December 2008

The newly unearthed diaries of a colourful assassin for the wartime Office of Strategic Services (OSS), the forerunner of the CIA, reveal that American spy chiefs wanted Patton dead because he was threatening to expose allied collusion with the Russians that cost American lives.

The death of General Patton in December 1945, is one of the enduring mysteries of the war era. Although he had suffered serious injuries in a car crash in Manheim, he was thought to be recovering and was on the verge of flying home.

But after a decade-long investigation, military historian Robert Wilcox claims that OSS head General "Wild Bill" Donovan ordered a highly decorated marksman called Douglas Bazata to silence Patton, who gloried in the nickname "Old Blood and Guts".

His book, Target Patton, contains interviews with Mr Bazata, who died in 1999, and extracts from his diaries, detailing how he staged the car crash by getting a troop truck to plough into Patton's Cadillac and then shot the general with a low-velocity projectile, which broke his neck while his fellow passengers escaped without a scratch. Mr Bazata also suggested that when Patton began to recover from his injuries, US officials turned a blind eye as agents of the NKVD, the forerunner of the KGB, poisoned the general. Mr Wilcox told The Sunday Telegraph that when he spoke to Mr Bazata: "He was struggling with himself, all these killings he had done. He confessed to me that he had caused the accident, that he was ordered to do so by Wild Bill Donovan.

'We've got a terrible situation with this great patriot, he's out of control and we must save him from himself'. The OSS head General did not trust Patton

"Donovan told him: 'We've got a terrible situation with this great patriot, he's out of control and we must save him from himself and from ruining everything the allies have done.' I believe Douglas Bazata. He's a sterling guy."

Mr Bazata led an extraordinary life. He was a member of the Jedburghs, the elite unit who parachuted into France to help organise the Resistance in the run up to D-Day in 1944. He earned four purple hearts, a Distinguished Service Cross and the French Croix de Guerre three times over for his efforts.

After the war he became a celebrated artist who enjoyed the patronage of Princess Grace of Monaco and the Duke and Duchess of Windsor.

He was friends with Salvador Dali, who painted a portrait of Bazata as Don Quixote. He ended his career as an aide to President Ronald Reagan's Navy Secretary John Lehman, a member of the 9/11 Commission and adviser to John McCain's presidential campaign.

Mr Wilcox also tracked down and interviewed Stephen Skubik, an officer in the Counter-Intelligence Corps of the US Army, who said he learnt that Patton was on Stalin's death list. Skubik repeatedly alerted Donovan, who simply had him sent back to the US.

"You have two strong witnesses here," Mr Wilcox said. "The evidence is that the Russians finished the job."

The scenario sounds farfetched but Mr Wilcox has assembled a compelling case that US officials had something to hide. At least five documents relating to the car accident have been removed from US archives.

The driver of the truck was whisked away to London before he could be questioned and no autopsy was performed on Patton's body.

With the help of a Cadillac expert from Detroit, Mr Wilcox has proved that the car on display in the Patton museum at Fort Knox is not the one Patton was driving.

"That is a cover-up," Mr Wilcox said. George Patton, a dynamic controversialist who wore ivory-handled revolvers on each hip and was the subject of an Oscar winning film starring George C. Scott, commanded the US 3rd Army, which cut a swathe through France after D-Day.

But his ambition to get to Berlin before Soviet forces was thwarted by supreme allied commander Dwight D. Eisenhower, who gave Patton's petrol supplies to the more cautious British General Bernard Montgomery.

Patton, who distrusted the Russians, believed Eisenhower wrongly prevented him closing the so-called Falaise Gap in the autumn of 1944, allowing hundreds of thousands of German troops to escape to fight again. This led to the deaths of thousands of Americans during their winter counter-offensive that became known as the Battle of the Bulge.

In order to placate Stalin, the 3rd Army was also ordered to a halt as it reached the German border and was prevented from seizing either Berlin or Prague, moves that could have prevented Soviet domination of Eastern Europe after the war.

Mr Wilcox told The Sunday Telegraph: "Patton was going to resign from the Army. He wanted to go to war with the Russians. The administration thought he was nuts. He also knew secrets of the war which would have ruined careers.

I don't think Dwight Eisenhower would ever have been elected president if Patton had lived to say the things he wanted to say." Mr Wilcox added: "I think there's enough evidence here that if I were to go to a grand jury I could probably get an indictment, but perhaps not a conviction."

Charles Province, President of the George S. Patton Historical Society, said he hopes the book will lead to definitive proof of the plot being uncovered. He said: "There were a lot of people who were pretty damn glad that Patton died. He was going to really open the door on a lot of things that they screwed up over there."

<http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/northamerica/usa/3869117/General-George-S.-Patton-was-assassinated-to-silence-his-criticism-of-allied-war-leaders-claims-new-book.html>

...back to the present ...and more of the same –

Holocaust Educational Trust gets £500,00 for Auschwitz visits

2 May 2013 Last updated at 17:02 GMT

More than £500,000 is to be awarded to a scheme which gives schoolchildren the chance to visit the site of the Auschwitz concentration camp.

The Scottish government announced the funding for the Holocaust Educational Trust, which was set up in 1988.

Newly arrived deportees and guards at the Nazi concentration camp at Auschwitz, Poland, circa 1943

It will allow two youngsters from every school and college in Scotland to go to the site in Poland and hear the testimony of a Holocaust survivor. More than 1,000 Scottish students have taken part in the project to date.

The Auschwitz-Birkenau concentration camp in modern day Poland was where more than a million people, most of them Jews, were killed by the Nazis during the course of World War II.

The Lessons from Auschwitz project aims to develop young people's understanding of the possible consequences of prejudice and racism in society.

First Minister Alex Salmond said: "It is right that we continue to fund these learning opportunities to ensure that as a society we never become complacent when regarding the dangers of prejudice, intolerance, discrimination and hatred."

'Never forget'

The scheme will receive £510,000 of further funding over the next two years.

University student Mhiara Mackenzie took part in Lessons from Auschwitz in 2009.

She said: "Participating in the project was a life-changing experience, one that I will never forget. Seeing Auschwitz-Birkenau with my own eyes made me appreciate how much people suffered during the Holocaust."

The chief executive of the Holocaust Educational Trust, Karen Pollock, said: "We are delighted that the Scottish government will continue to fund our Lessons from Auschwitz Project.

\*Charity marks 100th Auschwitz visit Watch

Related Internet links

Holocaust Educational Trust

Around the BBC

BBC Interactive Map of Auschwitz

The BBC is not responsible for the content of external Internet sites.

Fredrick Töben comments: ...remember the 1970s and Ernst Zündel's beginnings into Revisionism?

– notice Steve Lethos's defamatory language use when he talks about Ernst Zündel, below. That the 1988 Zündel Toronto Holocaust trial legally broke the back of Holocaust believers is not mentioned. Also, Lehto seems unaware of German philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer's maxim on truth and how it emerges in three stages: First it is ridiculed, which is what Prof Deborah Lipstadt did with Holocaust questioners by asserting, 'There is no discussion'; then it is violently opposed, which occurred globally after the 1988 Toronto trial when in so-called western democracies legal constraints were implemented against those who dared question matters 'Holocaust-Shoah'. Watered-down defamation laws that did not offer the usual 'truth is a defence' were modified and in most instances were re-framed as 'anti-racism' laws, thereby also giving legal protection to the term 'antisemitism', which through the Israel-Palestine tragedy has lost its meaning; finally, truth emerges as a given, i.e. as if there has never been a protracted fight about, for example, the factual existence or otherwise of homicidal gas chambers. The frenzy with which the 'Holocaust industry' is initiating compulsory 'Holocaust Studies' is directly proportional to the physical demise of the State of Israel, a kind of trade-off: Jews saying they'll give up the physical entity Israel but not the religious dogma of 'Holocaust-Shoah, which secures the Jews their perpetual victim status.

It may prove to be significant that Google on 1 May 2013 adopted the UN designation Palestine instead of Palestinian Territories – try it: www.google.ps.

On 29 November 2012 the UN general assembly adopted this motion 138 – 9 – 41. To that result Susan Rice the American ambassador to the United Nations stated: 'Today's grand announcements will soon fade and the Palestinian people will wake up tomorrow to find little of their lives has changed, save (that) the prospects of a durable peace have receded'.

Re the Holocaust proof issue - Holocaust sceptic Peter Wakefield Sault put it like this: 'Stop talking and just show me the evidence!'

How A Holocaust Denier Fooled The Internet With Nazi Jetpack Soldiers

STEVE LEHTO - SATURDAY 4 MAY 2013 11:00 PM

One of the great accomplishments of Nazi Germany's war machine was a jetpack that propelled their soldiers into the sky. It was a fantastical device whose story has been told many times on the web and it would be even more impressive if it weren't the propaganda of a Holocaust denier disguised as history.

I recently wrote The Great American Jet Pack which chronicles the history of the "Individual Lift Device." You know: The thing James Bond flew in the opening of Thunderball.

As you might imagine, I got to run down all sorts of crazy stories and wild rumours about things that flew or might have flown during the Cold War. One story that cropped up too often for me to ignore involved — well, let me just give you the headline from Gizmodo because Gizmodo always does the best headlines: Real Bloody Flying Nazi Soldiers with Jet Packs.

According to the common story, (and we can't blame Gizmodo, this story has a good amount of traction on the internet), the Germans developed a primitive man-rocket by strapping pulse jet engines (plural) to a soldier and saw successful tests where a soldier cleared 180 feet at a height of 50 feet. The dual pulse jet arrangement "consumed very little fuel, never ran hot, and didn't require special clothing." And oh, American scientists at Bell stole the idea, which led to the development of the Bell rocket belt. All of it is nonsense.

Despite Wendell Moore's well-documented invention of the rocket belt, stories and folklore abound of inventors whose roles in the creation of jet pack technology were somehow overlooked or suppressed. According to the Nazi jet pack story, the Germans experimented by strapping pulse-jet engines onto soldiers and launching them over obstacles on the battlefield.

The pulse-jet was the same engine that powered the V-1 "Buzz bomb," and seems a highly unlikely thing to strap to anyone if you expected them to survive the experience. No one has any photographs of the Himmel Stürmer — German for Sky Stormer — and the story is shrouded in mystery.

It is said that Americans captured the technology along with some other secret weapons and brought some of the devices back to America. Some websites go so far as to say that Bell Aerospace obtained one of the devices and Wendell Moore dissected it before coming up with his own rocket belt which he would eventually patent. A book called The Rocketbelt Caper devoted two pages to the mythical device with the caveat, "a lack of evidence suggests the Nazi rocket packs may have been pure propaganda."

"Propaganda" implied that the Germans said they had one, which is something that was also not supported by any evidence.

Websites that described the Nazi jet packs cite each other for support and when pressed, the creators of some of the sites admitted they had no evidence that any such device ever existed. One site sold dolls — "action figures" — made up to look like storm troopers wearing little jet packs and photographs of the dolls appeared on another website as evidence that the Himmel Stürmer was real. One writer claimed that the lack of evidence on the device proved its existence; if it wasn't real, why had the US government hidden the evidence?

People familiar with jet belt and pulse jet technology point out that the Himmel Stürmer could not have possibly been real. The engine in a V-1, known as an Argus As 014, was 13 feet long. Presumably, that would be a rather difficult thing to strap to one's back. Of course, the engine could be down-sized, but then the resulting engine would have been much less powerful. Could this have been done?

Disproving negatives can be a difficult thing. In this instance, it makes more sense to try and track down the "Himmel Stürmer" story to its source. Where did the story start? A writer using the name Christof Friedrich first wrote about Nazi jet packs in a book called German Secret Weapons and Wonder Weapons of World War Two in 1976. He also wrote a book called The Hitler We Loved & Why.

His real name was Ernst Zündel and he ran his own publishing company in Toronto. At first, many of his books — written under the pen name Christof Friedrich — were about UFOs and how the Germans had developed advanced technology during World War II which was kept secret from the general populace. Zündel explained how Hitler ran Secret Nazi Polar Explorations, in a book by that title in 1978, and about Hitler at the South Pole, in 1979. Somehow, a few readers who didn't see the lack of credibility in Zündel's writing saw his German secret weapons book and believed it to be true. It wasn't. One writer summarized Zündel's theories:

Some hollow Earth believers exhibit not just fascination with but open sympathy for Nazi Germany. The chief figure in the Nazi hollow-Earth movement is a Toronto man named Ernst Zündel, who writes under the name Christof Friedrich. Zündel operates a clearinghouse for Nazi materials and contends, as do other neo-Nazis, that the Holocaust never took place. In UFOs — Nazi Secret Weapons? (1976) he claimed that when World War II ended, Hitler and his Last Battalion boarded a submarine and escaped to Argentina; they then established a base for advanced saucer-shaped aircraft inside the hole at the South Pole. When the Allies learned what had happened, they dispatched Adm. Richard E. Byrd and a "scientific expedition" — in fact an army — to attack the Nazi base, but they were no match for the superior Nazi weapons.

We do not know if the Nazi soldiers defending Antarctica after World War II flew Himmel Stürmers or not during their epic battle; Zündel didn't mention the devices in that story. Perhaps a bigger concern was that Zündel had an ulterior motive for spinning his crazy UFO stories. He was a rabidly anti-Semitic Holocaust denier who used the UFO theories as a platform from which to preach his theories on what "really" happened during World War II.

Maybe his book The Hitler We Loved & Why should have tipped off his readers but the other titles he published certainly should have, such as Auschwitz, Dachau, Buchenwald: The Greatest Fraud in History, and Did Six Million Really Die? Zündel was a bizarre character in that he openly spoke about his beliefs and granted interviews to almost any journalist or reporter who approached him. One such writer named Frank Miele interviewed Zündel in 1993 and later wrote an article that included excerpts in Skeptic magazine. The article focused on Zündel's revisionist statements regarding the Holocaust and Miele asked him about his UFO literature. Zündel told him that it was the people who believed in UFOs — not the Holocaust deniers — who were the "real lunatic fringe."

In a later phone conversation, Zündel told me that the UFO book was in fact a ploy. "I realised that North Americans were not interested in being educated. They want to be entertained. The book was for fun. With a picture of the Fuhrer on the cover and flying saucers coming out of Antarctica it was a chance to get on radio and TV talk shows. For about 15 minutes of an hour program I'd talk about that esoteric stuff. Then I would start talking about all those Jewish scientists in concentration camps, working on these secret weapons. And that was my chance to talk about what I wanted to talk about."

The "UFO book" he was talking about was UFOs — Nazi Secret Weapons? Clearly, Zündel has no credibility regarding anything he wrote about these topics. He wrote the books because they sold and he used them as an entrée to talk shows because the topics were so popular. He had no evidence of UFOs, South Pole Nazi submarine bases, or of the Himmel Stürmer. He made them all up. The Himmel Stürmer was a figment of his imagination.

So, no: There never were Real Bloody Flying Nazi Soldiers with Jet Packs. But try telling that to Wikipedia. (Next time when we have a few minutes, I'll tell you about the crazy Romanian who has his whole country convinced that he invented the jet pack, and the Americans stole it from him.)

Steve Lehto wrote Chrysler's Turbine Car: The Rise and Fall of Detroit's Coolest Creation and The Great American Jet Pack: The Quest for the Ultimate Individual Lift Device both published by Chicago Review Press. <http://www.kotaku.com.au/2013/05/how-a-holocaust-denier-fooled-the-internet-with-nazi-jetpack-soldiers/>