Goldman Strikes Again:

Did A Probe Into "Global Warming" Fraud Cost A Prime Minister's Job

Submitted by Tyler Durden

on 09/26/2015 16:26 -0400

When Tony Abbott became Australia's prime minister in September 2013, the chain of events that would prematurely end his tenure may already have been in motion: just a few months later China would order its out of control shadow banking system to put on hold its debt issuance machinery, which as we reported a year ago, ground to a complete stop around November 2014 (which also was the explanation for the dramatic slowdown in the US economy over the winter as the collapse in China's Total Social Financing growth sent a deflationary ripple effect around the globe), which - as we warned at the time - would have dire consequences on all of China's "feeder" economies, namely Brazil and Australia.

But while we have been tracking the implosion of Brazil's economy since December, long before the rest of the world noticed the calamitous collapse of what was once Latin America's most vibrant economy, it was a very recent event in Australia - not the country's parallel economic slowdown also due to China's hard landing: that was painfully clear long in advance - that took many by surprise. Namely, the resignation of Tony Abbott almost exactly two years after becoming Prime Minister. And while it is easy to blame his admission of failure on external factors, namely the Chinese slowdown, a very surprising finding has emerged over the past few days, one which reveals Abbott's "ouster" in a totally different light.

According to Freedom of Information documents obtained by Australia's ABC, now-former prime minister Tony Abbott's own department discussed setting up an investigation into the Bureau of Meteorology amid media claims it was exaggerating estimates of global warming.

Yes, it appears that the prime minister himself had dared to question to prevailing status quo on "global warming." ABC reports that in August and September 2014, The Australian newspaper published reports questioning the Bureau of Meteorology's (BoM) methodology for analyzing temperatures, reporting claims BoM was "wilfully ignoring evidence that contradicts its own propaganda."

Naturally, the BoM strongly rejected assertions it was altering climate records to exaggerate estimates of global warming. Nevertheless, as the following document obtained by the ABC shows, just weeks after the articles were published, Mr Abbott's own department canvassed using a taskforce to carry out "due diligence" on the BoM's climate records.

As it turns out, late in 2014 the Australia government set up a taskforce to provide advice on post 2020 emissions reduction targets ahead of the United Nations Paris climate change conference in December 2015. The Department of Prime Minister and Cabinet originally wanted the taskforce to also conduct "due diligence to ensure Australia's climate and emissions data are the best possible, including the Bureau of Meteorology's Australian temperature dataset".

An accompanying brief seen by Mr Abbott noted that "in recent articles in The Australian, the BoM was accused of altering its temperature data records to exaggerate estimates of global warming". To wit from the ABC:

"The way the Bureau manages its climate records is recognised internationally as among the best in the world," the brief said.

"Nevertheless, the public need confidence information on Australia and the world's climate is reliable and based on the best available science."

Inexplicably, instead of letting it go as most "status quo" governments always do, the cabinet kept pushing with demands for audits: audits which, if taken too far, may reveals some truly very "inconvenient truths" if not so much about global warming, as about the propaganda behind it and the firms that stood to profit from such propaganda.

The pressure intensified when Mr Abbott's business advisory council chair Maurice Newman wrote an opinion piece in the paper, demanding a Government-funded audit and review of the Bureau.

The concerns centred on the Bureau's temperature homogenisation process — the method in which it adjusts temperatures for weather sites based on factors like trees casting shade or influencing wind or if the station is moved.

It was then that the pushback started in earnest: enter Greg Hunt, Australia's Environment Minister who would do everything in his power to halt Abbott's crusade to "audit" the BoM. In a letter to Abbott in November 2014, Hunt called for the removal of the due diligence clause, pointing out that he and his parliamentary secretary, Simon Birmingham, had already "established a strengthened governance oversight of the bureau's ongoing work in this area." In other words, "trust us" - we are the government... we work for you.

Both the Department of Environment and Environment Minister Greg Hunt argued against having the taskforce investigate the Bureau. One Department of Prime Minister and Cabinet bureaucrat described a Department of Environment official as being "on a campaign" to get the references to BoM removed from the taskforce's responsibilities.

Further documents appear to show Mr Hunt convinced senior cabinet members to remove any references of "due diligence" or "quality assurance".

In a letter to Mr Abbott written on November 18 last year, Mr Hunt highlighted the fact the "draft terms of reference refers to the taskforce doing due diligence on the Bureau of Meteorology's Australian temperature data set".

"In doing this, it is important to note that public trust in the Bureau's data and forecasts, particularly as they relate to bushfires and cyclones, is paramount," it said. "Given the recent publicity about the Bureau's temperature data sets, Senator Birmingham and I established a strengthened governance oversight of the Bureau's ongoing work in this area."

Said otherwise, don't you dare question global warming or else the public may lose faith in the Bureau of Meteorology's forecasts about "bushfires and cyclones." One couldn't possibly make this up if one tried.

As for the assurance Greg Hunt gave to Abbott to drop his audit, it basically was a promise to "self-regulate" better through a, drumroll, technical advisory forum:

The strengthened governance of the Bureau that Mr Hunt referred to is the setting up a Technical Advisory Forum to review and provide advice on the Bureau's temperature data — a recommendation from an earlier review of the Bureau's processes.

"It is important to emphasise that this is primarily a matter of meteorology, statistics and data assurance," Mr Hunt wrote in his letter to Mr Abbott.

This, of course, is a page right out of the Keynesian/monetarist playbook: one can't sow seeds of doubt in the mind of the public that the most sacrosanct assumptions about the world are wrong by open government probes be it by auditing the Fed, or Hillary's email server... or Australia's meteorological data, so instead let's just take their word that all the data will be scrubbed and double checked.

A 2011 review found the Bureau's data and analysis methods met world's best practice but recommended a group be set up to review progress on the development and operation of the temperature data.

The 2015 panel included eminent statisticians and members have told the ABC they were in no doubt that it was set up in response to the newspaper articles. A draft letter from Mr Abbott addressed to Mr Hunt showed that Mr Abbott wanted personal updates on the panel's review.

"The credibility of Government agencies is important and must be ensured," the letter read.

And while the review naturally cleared the BoM of any data "goal-seeking" when it was released in June, perhaps the threat of future such audits was simply too much - three months later Abbott was gone.

This is not Abbott's first concern about either met data, or global warming. As the Guardian notes, Abbott previously questioned the reliability of climate science, but when he was prime minister he repeatedly said he accepted the climate was changing and humans made "a contribution". In other public statements, Abbott said coal was "good for humanity" and wind turbines were "visually awful".

Perhaps the recent probe into the "statistics and data" behind the Australian Bureau of Meteorology were the straw that broke the camel's back: clearly Abbott was not going to be appeased and would continue his probes and audits into the "conventional wisdom" behind global warming, a persistence which threatened one firm more than any other.

Goldman Sachs.

While we hardly have to remind readers that it is Goldman that conceived of the carbon-credit market, and was behind cap and trade, here is an (in)convenient summary of who the true puppetmaster is behind the worldwide infatuation with stopping "global warming", and who stands to benefit the most as the world is manipulated into doing everything to kill global warming dead in its tracks, courtesy of Matt Taibbi:

...Fast-forward to today. it's early June in Washington, D.C. Barack Obama, a popular young politician whose leading private campaign donor was an investment bank called Goldman Sachs - its employees paid some $981,000 to his campaign - sits in the White House. Having seamlessly navigated the political minefield of the bailout era, Goldman is once again back to its old business, scouting out loopholes in a new government-created market with the aid of a new set of alumni occupying key government jobs. Gone are Hank Paulson and Neel Kashkari; in their place are Treasury chief of staff Mark Patterson and CFTC chief Gary Gensler, both former Goldmanites. (Gensler was the firm's co-head of finance.) And instead of credit derivatives or oil futures or mortgage-backed CDOs, the new game in town, the next bubble, is in carbon credits - a booming trillion dollar market that barely even exists yet, but will if the Democratic Party that it gave $4,452,585 to in the last election manages to push into existence a groundbreaking new commodities bubble, disguised as an "environmental plan," called cap-and-trade.

The new carbon-credit market is a virtual repeat of the commodities-market casino that's been kind to Goldman, except it has one delicious new wrinkle: If the plan goes forward as expected, the rise in prices will be government-mandated. Goldman won't even have to rig the game. It will be rigged in advance.

Here's how it works: If the bill passes, there will be limits for coal plants, utilities, natural-gas distributors and numerous other industries on the amount of carbon emissions (a.k.a. greenhouse gases) they can produce per year. If the companies go over their allotment, they will be able to buy "allocations" or credits from other companies that have managed to produce fewer emissions: President Obama conservatively estimates that about $646 billion worth of carbon credits will be auctioned in the first seven years; one of his top economic aides speculates that the real number might be twice or even three times that amount.

The feature of this plan that has special appeal to speculators is that the "cap" on carbon will be continually lowered by the government, which means that carbon credits will become more and more scarce with each passing year. Which means that this is a brand-new commodities market where the main commodity to be traded is guaranteed to rise in price over time. The volume of this new market will be upwards of a trillion dollars annually; for comparison's sake, the annual combined revenues of all' electricity suppliers in the U.S. total $320 billion.

Goldman wants this bill. The plan is (1) to get in on the ground floor of paradigm-shifting legislation, (2) make sure that they're the profit-making slice of that paradigm and (3) make sure the slice is a big slice. Goldman started pushing hard for cap-and-trade long ago, but things really ramped up last year when the firm spent $3.5 million to lobby climate issues. (One of their lobbyists at the time was none other than Patterson, now Treasury chief of staff.) Back in 2005, when Hank Paulson was chief of Goldman, he personally helped author the bank's environmental policy, a document that contains some surprising elements for a firm that in all other areas has been consistently opposed to any sort of government regulation. Paulson's report argued that "voluntary action alone cannot solve the climate-change problem." A few years later, the bank's carbon chief, Ken Newcombe, insisted that cap-and-trade alone won't be enough to fix the climate problem and called for further public investments in research and development. Which is convenient, considering that Goldman made early investments in wind power (it bought a subsidiary called Horizon Wind Energy), renewable diesel (it is an investor in a firm called Changing World Technologies) and solar power (it partnered with BP Solar), exactly the kind of deals that will prosper if the government forces energy producers to use cleaner energy. As Paulson said at the time, "We're not making those investments to lose money."

The bank owns a 10 percent stake in the Chicago Climate Exchange, where the carbon credits will be traded. Moreover, Goldman owns a minority stake in Blue Source LLC, a Utah-based firm that sells carbon credits of the type that will be in great demand if the bill passes. Nobel Prize winner Al Gore, who is intimately involved with the planning of cap-and-trade, started up a company called Generation Investment Management with three former bigwigs from Goldman Sachs Asset Management, David Blood, Mark Ferguson and Peter Hanis. Their business? Investing in carbon offsets, There's also a $500 million Green Growth Fund set up by a Goldmanite to invest in green-tech ... the list goes on and on. Goldman is ahead of the headlines again, just waiting for someone to make it rain in the right spot. Will this market be bigger than the energy-futures market?

"Oh, it'll dwarf it," says a former staffer on the House energy committee.

Well, you might say, who cares? If cap-and-trade succeeds, won't we all be saved from the catastrophe of global warming? Maybe - but cap-and-trade, as envisioned by Goldman, is really just a carbon tax structured so that private interests collect the revenues. Instead of simply imposing a fixed government levy on carbon pollution and forcing unclean energy producers to pay for the mess they make, cap-and-trade will allow a small tribe of greedy-as-hell Wall Street swine to turn yet another commodities market into a private tax-collection scheme. This is worse than the bailout: It allows the bank to seize taxpayer money before it's even collected.

Cap-and-trade is going to happen. Or, if it doesn't, something like it will. The moral is the same as for all the other bubbles that Goldman helped create, from 1929 to 2009. In almost every case, the very same bank that behaved recklessly for years, weighing down the system with toxic loans and predatory debt, and accomplishing nothing but massive bonuses for a few bosses, has been rewarded with mountains of virtually free money and government guarantees - while the actual victims in this mess, ordinary taxpayers, are the ones paying for it.

In short: trillions are at stake for Goldman as long as the "fight" against global warming continues. And as noted above, cap-and-trade is going to happen or "something like it will" - Goldman's future revenues depend on it.

In fact, the only thing that can crush this finely orchestrated plan to generate billions in private profits from the mass euphoria to "save the planet" funded, naturally, entirely by the taxpayer, is a critical piece of evidence that the data and statistics behind "global warming" has been fabricated, something which very well may have occurred had Abbott's plan for an audit gone too far.

And so Abbott suddenly became a major liability, if not so much for Australia, then certainly for Goldman Sachs.

In retrospect, while Abbott completely unexpected exit on September 14 was a shock, his Prime Ministerial replacement should come as no surprise at all: Malcolm Turnbull, as we noted, just happened to be Chairman of Goldman Sachs Australia from 1997-2001. The same Turnbull who was deposed as opposition leader in 2009 over his support for a carbon tax and an emissions trading scheme, a "scheme" that, when fully implemented, would lead to huge monetary windfalls for none other than Turnbull's former employer: Goldman Sachs.

So was Goldman the responsible party behind Abbott's ouster? One can only speculate, however one thing is certain: any concerns and fears of "probes" or "audits" into Australia's global warming "data and statistics" are now history.

2. Minister Hunt suggests removing the reference to the Bureau of Meteorology's (BOM) Australian temperature dataset. Your office has been working with Senator Birmingham to appoint a suitably qualified individual, supported by one or two independent technical experts to undertake a quality assurance review of the dataset by February 2015. This work need not be duplicated by the Taskforce. The review will look into the specific claims published in The Australian in August 2014 that the BOM was adjusting its data to fit a predetermined view of global warming.

Extreme trauma from male circumcision causes damage to areas of brain

By Ethan A. Huff, staff writer, Sunday, March 08, 2015

(NaturalNews) When it's inflicted upon females, the civilized world calls it genital mutilation and child abuse. But for males, the medical procedure known as circumcision is still widely performed and accepted (at least in the U.S.), even though science shows that snipping a newborn child's foreskin can cause permanent brain damage, particularly in the areas of the brain associated with reasoning, perception and emotions.

A team of nurses approached Dr. Paul Tinari, PhD, of Kingston General Hospital in Ontario, Canada, to make him aware of something which they had been observing for quite some time. Many of the newborn baby boys circumcised at the hospital were exhibiting excruciating levels of pain so severe, the nurses reported, that the behavior of these children seemed to be changing in a tangible and possibly permanent way.

In order to verify these claims, Dr. Tinari suggested that the brains of circumcised boys be analyzed both before and after the procedure using functional Magnetic Resonance Imaging (fMRI) and/or Positron Emission Tomography (PET) scanning to look for changes. Using one of the nurse's sons as a test subject -- her husband was insistent upon circumcision, against her better judgment -- the team evaluated the boy both before and after circumcision.

The child was initially kept inside the machine for several minutes to generate baseline data on his normal metabolic brain activity. This data was used to perform a comparative analysis after the circumcision procedure. Based on MRI data collected throughout the process, the research team noted "significant trauma" in conjunction with the foreskin removal process, with the most pronounced brain changes occurring in the limbic system, which includes the amygdala and frontal and temporal lobes.

After presenting these results to a neurologist, it was interpreted that the circumcision process had inflicted extreme trauma on the boy, so much so that his entire sense of reasoning, perception and emotions were thrown off kilter. And follow-up tests conducted one day, one week and one month after surgery revealed that these changes were permanent -- the circumcised boy's brain would likely never return to its normal baseline configuration.

Male circumcision is cruel, inhumane and medically unnecessary

These shocking results run sharply counter to what many conventional doctors in America today still embrace as routine medical practice -- the idea that baby boys need to have their penises cut with a knife in order to be healthy and normal. Many medical professionals still cling, like mildew on a filthy shower curtain, to this outmoded and barbaric practice, much like they do to the vaccine myth that perpetuates lies like herd immunity and "your vaccinated children are threatened by unvaccinated children."

Because it disrupts the status quo, Dr. Tinari's study has yet to be published -- not because it's inaccurate, but because it doesn't fit the official narrative of sound medicine. Even though virtually every other country on the planet has abandoned male circumcision as a cruel and inhumane practice, the U.S. is still on board with the sham (though an increasing number of parents are refusing circumcision for their baby boys).

"Our problems began when we attempted to publish our findings in the open medical literature," stated Dr. Tinari, the current director of the Pacific Institute for Advanced Study. "I would encourage anyone with access to fMRI and /or PET scanning machines to repeat our research as described... confirm our results, and then publish the results in the open literature."

A more thorough description of Dr. Tinari's work is available here:

Wave of shock and outrage over Volkswagen's emissions deception reveals incredible gullibility of young, trendy consumers;

VW's real history traces back to Adolf Hitler's Third Reich

By Mike Adams, the Health Ranger, Friday, September 25, 2015

(NaturalNews) The wave of shock and outrage being expressed right now over Volkswagen's emissions deception only proves one thing: Young, trendy consumers are incredibly naive and uninformed when it comes to how global corporations really operate. Those of us who have long covered the fraud and criminality of the corporate world -- Monsanto, Enron, Arthur Anderson, Pfizer, Merck, etc. -- aren't surprised one bit by the fact that Volkswagen committed large-scale fraud to swindle customers and deceive government regulators. This is practically the entire business model of Monsanto, Syngenta and other biotech companies. Vaccine manufacturers, too, are engaged in wholesale scientific fraud, knowingly selling faulty products that actually cause outbreaks rather than halting them.

Drug companies invent fake diseases (like ADHD) in order to sell drugs to people who don't need them. The entire ADHD diagnosis is a complete fraud, having no basis whatsoever in biology, lab testing or brain scans. And media corporations deliberately lie to the public every day, creating and promoting false narratives to push their political agendas.

Corporations LIE... that's their business model

Anyone who expects corporations to behave with anything resembling integrity is a fool. As Volkswagen just demonstrated yet again, corporations will commit whatever fraud they think they can get away with.

This is true even for "trendy" companies loved by hipsters on the political left.

Consumers on the left, by the way, are emotional decision makers. They buy Volkswagens and iPhones because of a "feeling" about the companies that make them. These feelings have no basis in fact, of course: They are entirely contrived and engineered by the corporations themselves via P.R. and advertising campaigns. Behind the feel-good imagery of focus group-tested advertising and social engineering campaigns lie unethical, evil corporations that run slave labor factories and openly lie to their own customers.

Volkswagen's origins are found in the Third Reich

Volkswagen's origins, of course, are rooted in the Third Reich and Adolf Hitler. It was Hitler who helped give rise to the company, touting it as a pioneer in bringing affordable automobiles to the (obedient) masses. "Both Volkswagen and Porsche had close connections with the Third Reich. It was Ferdinand Porsche who designed the 'people's car,' the legendary VW Beetle, in 1934. Adolf Hitler was so taken with the engineer he declared him 'brilliant.'" reports Der Spiegel.

But if you ask a trendy young person today what they know about Volkswagen, you'll find they're completely clueless about the company, its origins, its ethics and the history of its fraud.

Similarly, most Americans have no idea that IBM provided key technology to the Third Reich, supplying the Hitler regime with the punch card systems that tracked Jewish prisoners to be exterminated in mass genocide.

Bayer, too, is a company rooted in the Third Reich and mass medical experiments carried out on Jewish prisoners. Bayer was once part of the IG Farben chemical conglomerate that was broken into three companies following the World War II war crimes tribunals. One of those three became Bayer, and its Chairperson actually served prison time for crimes against humanity.

It turns out that every time some uninformed mom in America buys some Bayer aspirin for her child, she's actually supporting a corporation that's deeply rooted in the Hitler regime and the extermination of Jews. [What a lot of rubbish – ed. AI]

Apple, Volkswagen and Bayer sell products to the dumbed-down masses who know nothing about the real world

When people purchase products from Apple, Volkswagen or Bayer, they are openly admitting how incredibly ignorant they are about the real world.

These three corporations are rooted in dark, evil practices that exploit and destroy human lives for profit. In fact, I dare say that driving around a VW while using an iPhone is a parade of stupidity from easily hoodwinked people who think they're "green" or "trendy" but are actually ignorant and gullible.

Informed people who care about humanity don't support companies like Apple, Monsanto, Volkswagen, Merck or Bayer for the same reason that they don't support Adolf Hitler, the Third Reich and the Holocaust.

Genetically white woman now claims self-identify as black: If you can choose your gender, can you also choose your race? What about your species? Can a human claim to be a llama?

Saturday, June 13, 2015

By Mike Adams, the Health Ranger

(NaturalNews) This article is not satire. It offers a series of philosophical discussion points that I'm sure many people share these days, and it's all spurred by the case of Rachel Dolezal, head of the Spokane chapter of the NAACP. Dolezal says she is black and identifies herself as African-American. In reality, however, Dolezal is actually white.

"Dolezal's own birth certificate list her biological parents as Ruthanne and Lawrence Dolezal of Montana," reports KXLY.com. "The Dolezals told KXLY Thursday that Rachel is their biological daughter and that they are both white."

So Dolezal was born white, but she decided she was black. She's done up her hair to fit in, but she's really white. In other words, she's "dressing black." But that's not exactly the same as actually being of African origin, is it?

This curious question comes on the heels of Bruce Jenner being born male, then later deciding she's female (Caitlyn Jenner). I've written extensively about the Caitlyn Jenner "freedom to choose" phenomenon at this article on Natural News, which, believe it or not, encourages Caitlyn Jenner to publicly call for personality liberty and the freedom to choose in other areas of life (such as parental rights, religious freedom, freedom of speech, medical freedom and so on).

What's factually non-debatable about both of these cases is the biology: Dolezal was born genetically Caucasian. Caitlyn Jenner was born genetically male. Both of them, of course, were also born as members of the human species, known as "homo sapiens." On these points, there is no disagreement.

If a person can choose their gender, can they also choose their race?

So here's the logical question in pursuing the "self identity" trend that progressive society is now exploring. Today's society has arrived at a place where it largely accepts the idea that people can choose their gender. A person can be born as a male, but decide to identify as a female, in other words. Now with Dolezal, the question being posed is a little more intriguing: Can a person choose their race, too?

And extending the logic into the realm of the absurd, if a person can choose their gender and race, then why can't they choose to be a member of a different species, too?

Put another way, society currently accepts the idea of a person choosing to be transgender. So is it then okay for someone to be trans-race? And if that's accepted, then what about trans-species? Carried to its logical extreme, can a white male human being declare to the world that he's actually a female Peruvian llama?

So the question being posed is this: If Caitlyn Jenner can choose to be a woman, why can't Rachel Dolezal choose to be black?

Owls, dolphins and cats: Are these personal choices too?

What if John Doe, for example, wants to self-identify as a "Spotted Owl"?

Or maybe Jane Doe wants to identify as a member of the Delphinus delphis species... the common dolphin. Maybe she can even learn to speak dolphin and order in dolphin at the McDonald's drive-through.

There are, indeed, people who have come to believe they are certain animals. Dennis Avner, for example, believes he is a great cat, and he has undergone extreme biological modifications in an attempt to adopt the shape and structure of a great cat. The following photo is not Photoshopped:

The obvious question is: if Bruce Jenner can choose to be a woman, and Rachel Dolezal can choose to be African-American (even though there isn't an African ounce of blood in her body), then why can't Dennis Avner choose to be recognized as an actual member of a great cat species?

Is it progressive, or just getting ridiculous?

I hope you see the point in this serious discussion. If people can choose to decide to be something which they are not from a physical or biological perspective, then is there any real meaning to concepts like male, female, Caucasian, African or even human?

Is it going to be considered "progressive" to allow people to identify themselves as other organisms because they choose to do so? "Hi, I'm Billy the Ebola. I'm actually an Ebola virus, not a human."

Even more interestingly, could humans add themselves to endangered species lists by simply announcing they are an endangered species? "I'm Otto the Spotted Owl." The implications for the EPA and the U.S. government would be quite fascinating. For example, to my knowledge, I don't think the IRS can levy taxes on Spotted Owls. So if a person announces they are a Spotted Owl, are they now a "sovereign animal" that's protected by the government in their "habitat" apartment?

Without question, a court judge would denounce a person trying to claim they are a spotted owl. But let's follow the logic here. That judge would say, "You are obviously not a spotted owl. You weren't born a spotted owl and if we run a genetic test on your cells, they would not be consistent with a spotted owl."

Let's take that same test and run it against Rachel Dolezal. Following that test, a court judge would say much the same thing: "You are obviously not black. You weren't born black and if we run a genetic test on your cells, they would not be consistent with an African-American."

Consistent with his personal beliefs, Dennis has undergone extensive surgeries to modify his facial structure, teeth, hair, eyes and much more... all in an effort to become the great cat that he feels like he already is on the inside.

Tracking this same logic back to Bruce Jenner, a court judge would also be forced to conclude much the same: "You weren't born female and if we run a genetic test on your cells, they would not be consistent with a female."

From a genetics point of view, then, Bruce Jenner is a male, Rachel Dolezal is white, and John Doe is not a spotted owl. But that's not how progressive society recognizes them, at least not with Jenner. They are recognized according to how they WISH to be identified.

Restated, the question that emerges from all this is as follows: Should society treat people as they physically are, or as they psychologically WISH to be? In other words, where does freedom to choose collide with the absurd?

That's the key question in all this, you see. To paraphrase it: Can a person spontaneously decide to be whatever they want, even if what they want contradicts what they really are from a biological and genetics point of view? It seems that the current answer is YES. If the answer is YES, then are there any limits at all to how far someone can take this?

What about people who feel they are psychologically trapped in the wrong body?

This question may seem to be complicated by what's commonly described as a disparity between the psychology and the biology of people who are gay. Many gay men, for example, describe their experience as being, "Born as a woman trapped in a man's body." (And vice-versa for gay women.)

It is this disparity between psychology and biology that lends support to the widespread acceptance of gay lifestyles, where modern society has largely accepted that people can choose to identify with a chosen mindset even if it contradicts their genetics. Such is the very foundation of laws now emerging which say that biological men can legally use women's public restrooms if they "identify" as women (even if they have a penis and might be just fine with a urinal).

However, if you take all this just one step further, you can argue that a woman who "feels" black -- even though she's white -- should also be able to choose to identify as African-American, even though both her biological parents are white. There are serious practical problems with this, however, as I'll discuss below on the issue of college scholarships...

And again, if you go yet one more step down the path of this logic, you arrive at a situation where you can argue that people who "feel" like they are tigers, or dolphins, or eagles should be allowed to self-identify as such creatures and even recognized as those actual creatures in society.

In other words, society today recognizes Caitlyn Jenner as a woman. We refer to her as a HER, for example. Because of how insidious political correctness has become in society today, I'm fully expecting everybody to soon recognize Rachel Dolezal as "black." And if we extend this same social acceptance into the realm of species, how could anyone reject another person who wants to claim they are a Tyrannosaurus Rex or even a fictional humanoid being such as a Vulcan from the Star Trek series? (Spock was a Vulcan.)

In other words, reality now has no meaning because what we're being taught is that there is no objective reality when it comes to people, gender, races and beings. You can decide to be a unicorn, if you want, and who can argue with that? Just don't forget to wear your giant horn. And yes, it's a rainbow-colored strap-on.

Free scholarships to all white people claiming they are black?

This discussion brings up all sorts of important practical questions for society. If people can self-identify their own gender and race, then it becomes immediately obvious that all white people can apply for college scholarships by self-identifying as African-Americans, for example. I'm not condoning this -- the very idea is ludicrous -- yet it's where we now find ourselves in a society that believes everybody can "choose" to be whatever they want to be, despite what they really are.

So why can't a white kid short on college funding just "choose" to be black and apply for scholarships as such? Obviously, scholarships that are set aside for African-Americans should be reserved for those African-Americans. Yet what's to stop a white person from claiming they're black so they can cash in on that scholarship money? No genetic testing is required as far as I know. And if "being black" just means putting your hair in a 'fro and joining the NAACP as Rachel Dolezal has done, then what's to stop a surge of lower-income white people from claiming all the black scholarship money across America's universities?... and thereby denying black people the scholarship money they truly need to strive for an education opportunity?

(Doesn't it just anger you to think that black people, after suffering generations of discrimination, could be IMPERSONATED by white people in order to take black peoples' scholarship money? Somehow this becomes a multi-layered injustice that's wholly offensive to ethics and morality.)

Taking this even further, how about someone who's actually white, but claims they were discriminated against in a job environment because they self-identify as black? Is it possible for a person's psychology to be racially discriminated against, even if the discrimination claim contradicts the person's genetic ethnicity? "They didn't give me that job because they knew that I consider myself to be black!" But they're actually white. Can that person file a racial discrimination lawsuit and win? For another example of the ultra-absurd, how about a human who self-identifies as a dog and decide to defecate and urinate in public, on various lawns, but cleans up after himself with a doggy poop bag. Because all other dogs routinely defecate in the public (and in the nude), how can this behavior be wrong, right? If this person is cited by local law enforcement for indecent exposure, can his defense be that he "self-identifies as a canine," and is only "using the public restroom" in a way that's entirely consistent with canine behavior? Dogs poop on lawns. I'm a dog. Therefore, I can poop on lawns, too. (i.e. You can't judge me on my physical biology and genetics because I identify myself as a canine, not homo sapiens.)

If these examples seem silly, you need to realize it's already happening

Your initial reaction to these absurd scenarios might be, "Well that's just stupid. No one would do that."

And yet you're already wrong: We have a white woman in Spokane, Washington who claims to be black. We also have people living right now who honestly believe they are specific animals, such as the Dennis Avner example mentioned above. We simultaneously have all sorts of people choosing to be different genders than what they are genetically. You response might be, "Well those are not all the same thing. Gender is different." And you're correct, these aren't the same thing. What I'm exploring is where are society's limits along the spectrum of embracing or rejecting people who choose to self-identify with labels that contradict their genetic reality?

Are there any limits at all? Should there be any limits at all? It can't merely be "whatever people BELIEVE they are should be accepted." Caitlyn Jenner believes she is a woman, and I don't personally have a problem with that because it's her personal choice. Rachel Dolezal believes she is black, but I do have a problem with that because somehow it seems like she's impersonating black people. Dennis Avner believes he is a great cat. That just seems weird to me, but who am I to judge, right? Where does society draw the line, if any, on which of these beliefs are "socially acceptable" vs. socially rejected? And if any of them are rejected at all, then isn't that totally inconsistent with the very idea that people should be free to choose whom they wish to love or what they wish to be?

One more step down the rabbit hole

Now, I'm really going to throw you for a loop and give one more example demonstrating the logical extension of the extreme absurdity which could be extrapolated from all this.

If we are to recognize people as members of other species, then our recognition requires that we allow them to "love" the members of those other species as well.

For example, if Dennis Avner self-identifies as a cat, and if he were to have sex with another great cat, then wouldn't that be him simply choosing "who he wants to love?" Isn't that Avner simply "being himself" and expressing the full spectrum of his great cat social interactions? This is even more true if the cat of his choice reciprocates that love and affection for him, correct? You can't call it bestiality, you see, if someone self-identifies as the same animal species they are having intercourse with. If someone announces they are a sheep, to cite another extremely absurd example, then is society supposed to accept that person having open sex with other sheep in a field somewhere? If you call it "bestiality," that's a violation of that person's choice of whom they wish to love, isn't it?

On the issue of marriage then, if marriage is to be accepted among any beings who decide to love each other, then can't the argument be made that Dennis Avner can marry a leopard? Or that Joe Blow can marry a sheep? Or how about some guy marrying five dogs? (Is that called Podogamy?)

If marriage is to be redefined as joining any sentient beings that love each other, then obviously we can't limit it to just only marriages between humans. The real question remains: Where is the line arbitrarily drawn, and by invoking what principles, if any? Society seems to be in the process right now of redefining marriage as a union between "any two people who love each other." But why limit it to just two? Why limit it to just "people?" I can even hear the Supreme Court arguing, "Why can't a man decide to marry five horses and demand a local church carry out that wedding?"

Can people love and partner with non-being objects such as cars?

Interestingly, there are people alive today who suffer a sort of mental illness that causes them to be sexually attracted to cars. Some people even have sex with cars, and no, I'm not making this up. (No, I'm not sure how they "do it." Never bothered to ask, and I probably don't want to know.)

What if these people "self-identify" as being cars themselves? Is there any rule in society which says they cannot simply decide to be a Volvo, or a Volkswagen, or even a Ford pickup?

You see where this goes? If a white person can decide to be black, and then another person can decide to be a great cat, then why can't yet another person decide to be a Dodge Ram? Vroom, vroom.... who's your daddy now?

And if you're a Dodge Ram, then it's "normal" to have sex with a Mini Cooper, we'll probably be told. So when you see these people running around the streets with their pants pulled down, sticking it to parked cars, just remember: that's politically correct behavior in our bizarre society today because the person "self-identifies" as being an actual Dodge Ram who "loves" Mini Coopers. Where's George Carlin, by the way, when you really need his comment on all this?

For my part in all this, I can't wait to see if Rachel Dolezal is going to be recognized as being African-American even if she's white. If she is, then it opens up a Pandora's Box of bizarre new possibilities for white people to unfairly claim black scholarships, for humans to claim they are animals, and for people to demand they should be able to marry their pet goats (or whatever animals they love).

Progressive society will have gone completely insane at that point, of course, by utterly abandoning any attachment to reality. So strap on your unicorn horns and hump some Volkswagens, folks. Apparently we are now living in a free-for-all that's starting to resemble the weird, distorted characters in online role playing games, where Blondie the Bodacious, a 25th level wizard, is actually overweight Bob living in the basement, munching on Pop Tarts and Chicken McNuggets while scratching his crotch.

Something has gone totally off the rails in society, and I can't quite put my finger on how it all started. Can YOU explain it? If so, sound off in the comment section below this article.

Obesity isn't healthy or normal, America!

Natural News in no way endorses the crude mockery of individuals who, in this case, are largely poisoned by genetically-modified organisms (GMOs), artificial additives, chemicals and other poisons peddled on the masses as "food." At the same time, it is important to point out that being obese isn't normal and shouldn't be praised as if it were a virtue.

Sure, Arbour could have taken a much more professional and dignified tone with her rant and pointed out why the modern food supply has spurred an epidemic of obesity. She also could have instructed obese people as to what they can do to get their bodies in shape in order to avoid developing a chronic health condition.

It's not the type of thing we would normally promote, but it does break the ice on a taboo subject that more people need to address -- the fact that obesity is a serious health condition that needs to be acknowledge and treated, not embraced and promoted. The sweeping tide of transgender promotion occupies a similar vein of taboo that likewise deserves attention. Mentally damaged transgender folks like Bruce "Caitlyn" Jenner aren't victims of a broken gender classification standard as we're all being told; they're victims of some other traumatic event that caused them to question their gender identity in the first place.

If American society and civilization at large is to persist with any sort of normalcy, these and other similar issues need to be addressed by the remaining segments of sane society. Obesity, transgenderism, junk food addiction, pharmaceutical pill-popping -- these hallmarks of New America are in no way healthy or normal and should not be treated as such.

Abortion now available by phone

anna maria, Monday, September 28, 2015

Australian women can now terminate their pregnancy by phone.

The Tabbot Foundation makes an assessment over the phone and if approved, the company sends out the drug mifepristone, as well as painkillers and anti-nausea pills to their door for the cost of $250.

From the Tabbot Foundation website.

The Tabbot Foundation has been established to provide an Australia-wide telephone consultation home medical termination of pregnancy service. Abortion has been revolutionised by the use of new medications which have been available throughout the world for more than a decade but have been restricted for use in Australia until more recently. In July 2013, after years of banning this drug's importation into Australia by previous governments, Tanya Plibersek, as Minister of Health, approved the listing of the abortion drug mifepristone on the Pharmaceutical Benefits Scheme. Plibersek described the provision of the medicine as "a good thing in the situation where women are faced with one of the most difficult decisions that they will ever make." Mifepristone has been safely used by millions of women in more than 50 countries who have had access to it for several years. It is a safer, less invasive procedure than the alternatives not just because it can be performed much earlier than surgical abortions, but because it can be done safely in the privacy of a woman's home without surgical intervention. The expansion of access to medical terminations by tele-medicine is particularly important to women living in rural and regional Australia. These women have to travel long distances or indeed travel interstate to undergo surgery or not had the option of surgery at all. Home-based medical abortion is intended to simplify the medical abortion regimen without compromising safety. Home-based medical abortion improves the acceptability of medical abortion by allowing for greater privacy than in-clinic abortion and giving women greater control over the timing of the abortion. In reports from France, Sweden, Tunisia and the United States, the majority of women opted for home-based medical abortion when offered the choice. Self-administration of the drugs is already common in France and the United States.

After placing the call, the patient is referred to an ultrasound and pathology test, and then consults with doctors (and a psychologist in NSW) over the phone.

Her progress is monitored by a 24 hour on-call doctor with continued check-ups and a final blood test takes place to confirm the abortion after ten days.

This service will not only help women in rural areas, but those who feel intimidated going to an abortion clinic. Although abortion medicine has been available for some time, it was found that some GPs are reluctant to prescribe it. And now they won't have to.

Abolish the White Race Harvard Magazine, September-October 2002

This excerpt from When Race Becomes Real: Black and White Writers Confront Their Personal Histories, edited by Bernestine Singley, appeared in 2002 as part of Harvard Magazine's coverage of recent books by Harvard affiliates. The excerpt concerns author Noel Ignatiev's role in launching a journal "to chronicle and analyze the making, remaking, and unmaking of whiteness."

"The good news is that there are now a host of writers and a growing number of courses and workshops designed to enlighten white people as to the real benefits and the great cost of their property in whiteness," writes former Harvard Law School professor Derrick Bell in his epilogue to When Race Becomes Real: Black and White Writers Confront Their Personal Histories, edited by Bernestine Singley, LL.M. '76 (Lawrence Hill Books, $26.95). Many of those engaged in this Herculean task are white, Bell notes, among them Noel Ignatiev, Ed.M. '85, Ph.D. '94, C.A.S. '95, author of How the Irish Became White and a fellow at the W.E.B. Du Bois Institute, who writes:

In the interests of survival, Afro-Americans have always studied whiteness. There is a long tradition among them that the white race is a peculiar sort of social formation, one that depends on its members' willingness to conform to the institutions and behavior patterns that reproduce it. By the early 1900s...it was becoming commonplace in the academy to speak of race, along with class and gender, as a social construct....

In addition to the notion of race as a social construct, [an old friend, John Garvey, and I] shared another, which we owed to the West Indian Marxist C.L.R. James: that ordinary Americans are drawn by the conditions of their lives in two opposite directions, one that mirrors and reproduces the present society of competition and exploitation, and another that points toward a new society based on freely associated activity. We believed that this internal antagonism played itself out as a civil war within the white mind, between the desire of whites to wall themselves off from black Americans and their desire to overcome the boundaries that kept them apart.

John and I decided that it was time to launch a journal to document that civil war. The result was Race Traitor, whose first issue appeared in the fall of 1992 with the slogan "Treason to whiteness is loyalty to humanity" on its cover. The aim was to chronicle and analyze the making, remaking, and unmaking of whiteness. My book on the Irish was the story of how people for whom whiteness had no meaning learned its rules and adapted their behavior to take advantage of them; Race Traitor was an attempt to run the film backwards, to explore how people who had been brought up as white might become unwhite....

The goal of abolishing the white race is on its face so desirable that some may find it hard to believe that it could incur any opposition other than from committed white supremacists. Of course we expected bewilderment from people who still think of race as biology. We frequently get letters accusing us of being "racists," just like the KKK, and have even been called a "hate group."

Our standard response is to draw an analogy with anti-royalism: to oppose monarchy does not mean killing the king; it means getting rid of crowns, thrones, royal titles, etc....

Every group within white America has at one time or another advanced its particular and narrowly defined interests at the expense of black people as a race. That applies to labor unionists, ethnic groups, college students, schoolteachers, taxpayers, and white women. Race Traitor will not abandon its focus on whiteness, no matter how vehement the pleas and how virtuously oppressed those doing the pleading. The editors meant it when they replied to a reader, "Make no mistake about it: we intend to keep bashing the dead white males, and the live ones, and the females too, until the social construct known as 'the white race' is destroyed—not 'deconstructed' but destroyed."

Harvard professor argues for 'abolishing' white race

By - The Washington Times - Wednesday, September 4, 2002

A Harvard professor wants to abolish the white race.

Noel Ignatiev, a founder of a journal called Race Traitor and a fellow at Harvard's W.E.B. DuBois Institute, a leading black-studies department, argues in the current issue of Harvard Magazine that "abolishing the white race" is "so desirable that some may find it hard to believe" that anyone other than "committed white supremacists" would oppose it.

In excerpts appearing this week in newspapers nationwide, Mr. Ignatiev, who is white, writes that "every group within white America," including "labor unionists, ethnic groups, college students, schoolteachers, taxpayers and white women" has at one time or another "advanced its particular and narrowly defined interests at the expense of black people as a race."

Mr. Ignatiev pledges in the essay that his journal, Race Traitor, intends to "keep bashing the dead white males, and the live ones, and the females, too, until the social construct known as 'the white race' is destroyed not 'deconstructed' but destroyed." His colleagues at Harvard seem not to take his proposal entirely seriously. Others cite the article as an example of Harvard's institutional racism.

Sara Stillman, assistant to the publisher of Harvard Magazine, says there's clearly some "misunderstanding" about what Mr. Ignatiev means by the inflammatory language.

Asked in a 1997 interview with the New York Times if he hates his own white skin, Mr. Ignatiev said, "No, but I want to abolish the privileges."

"The white race is like a private club based on one huge assumption that all those who look white, are, whatever their complaints or reservations, fundamentally loyal to the race. We want to dissolve that club, to explode it," he said.

Christopher Reed, executive editor of Harvard Magazine, defended what Mr. Ignatiev wrote in the September-October issue. "He's arguing against the mind-set and attitude that automatically grants privileges to white people he wants more fairness," Mr. Reed said in a statement.

The university's public affairs office said it had no comment.

The article already has stirred anger among some conservatives, who see the article as typical of the liberal climate in academia.

"Suppose Frontpagemagazine.com ran a headline 'Abolish the Black Race?'" asks David Horowitz on his magazine's Web site. "What do you think the reaction would be? But at Harvard, where demonizing whites is merely the standard curriculum, an article like this can appear in a glossy magazine whose cover story is 'Whither the Art Museum?'"

"Race hatred, if directed against white people, is just part of the progressive culture," says Mr. Horowitz, a radical-turned-conservative and author of "Civil Wars: The Controversy Over Reparations for Slavery."

Mr. Ignatiev, a one-time steelworker and Marxist activist who earned a doctorate at Harvard, could not be reached for comment. But he writes about what he believes at the Web site of Race Traitor, whose motto is: "Treason to whiteness is loyalty to humanity. The key to solving the social problems of our age is to abolish the white race, which means no more and no less than abolishing the privileges of the white skin. Until that task is accomplished, even partial reform will prove elusive, because white influence permeates every issue, domestic and foreign, in U.S. society," the journal's statement of purpose says.

"The existence of the white race depends on the willingness of those assigned to it to place their racial interests above class, gender, or any other interests they hold. The defection of enough of its members to make it unreliable as a predictor of behavior will lead to its collapse."

Among the "privileges" of being white, according to Race Traitor, are not being followed by security in stores, not being harassed by police, having easier access to better schools, jobs and housing, and not being asked whether skin color or affirmative action got you a job.

In the essay in Harvard Magazine, Mr. Ignatiev says he always expected "bewilderment" at his views from "people who still think of race as biology."

"We frequently get letters accusing us of being 'racists' just like the KKK, and have even been called a 'hate group.'" he wrote.

Mr. Ignatiev attempts to clarify how he could be seeking to abolish the white race without calling for genocide.

"Our standard response is to draw an analogy with anti-royalism: to oppose monarchy does not mean killing the king; it means getting rid of crowns, thrones, royal titles, etc."

Abolition of a monarchy has often been marked by killing the monarch and sometimes his family members; for example, England in 1649, France in 1792, Russia in 1917 and Iraq in 1958. Even those nations that have abolished kings or emperors without regicide generally have forced the monarch into exile.

Mr. Ignatiev grew up in a Philadelphia family that he says was devoid of racial bias. As a child, he swam at a free community pool, where he was the only white patron. He says his parents refused to pay a $1 fee that was designed to keep other public pools all-white.

Mr. Ignatiev's parents, Jewish immigrants from Russia, were not college educated, but he attended the University of Pennsylvania, dropping out after three years. He worked in a Chicago steel mill and in factories that made farm equipment and electrical parts for two decades. At the steel mill, he helped organize strikes and protests by the predominantly black work force.

He was laid off from the steel mill in 1984, a year after he was arrested on charges of throwing a paint bomb at a strike-breaker's car. He set up Marxist discussion groups in the early 1980s. In 1985, Mr. Ignatiev was accepted to the Harvard Graduate School of Education without an undergraduate degree. After earning his master's, he joined the Harvard faculty as a lecturer and worked toward a doctorate in U.S. history. His dissertation was his book, "How the Irish Became White." Mr. Ignatiev said the book told how Irish immigrants came to the United States and became "oppressors" by emulating American whites.

German philosopher Martin Heidegger says:

The Jews, with their marked gift for calculating, live, already for the longest time, according to the principle of race, which is why they are resisting its consistent application with utmost violence.

The principle of race remains questionably untouched by those who consider RACE not as a natural phenomenon but as a social construct, which has to be eliminated by "browning" Europeans!

Racism amongst the non Europeans is rampant – but that is tolerated by the cultural Talmudic Marxists who aim to create a One World where all humans are equal – with those seeking to eliminate the white race as becoming morer equal than the rest of humanity. That's their reward for advocating European genocide.

Dear Reader,

In 1946 the Allied Military Tribunal at Nuremberg declared itself to be an instrument of "a continuation of the war effort of the Allied nations" against Germany – IMT, XIX, p. 397.

To this day courts in Germany are bound by any of the tribunal's statements, as codified in the 4+2 treaties of 1990, and cannot challenge their validity. However, this makes a mockery of Germany's Basic Law - Grundgesetz that has enshrined in Section 5 "freedom of opinion" as one of its pillars.

And so in order to circumvent Section 5 of the Basic Law, Section 130 of the Criminal Law-Strafgesetzbuch, was enacted, which enables authorities to put on trial anybody who disputes the holocaust hypothesis. This "specific Holocaust law" also offends against the UN's Universal Declaration Of Human Rights as well as the Declaration of the United Nations Council for Human Rights 2011, which states that, "publication of opinions about historical facts are not to be penalized", under any circumstances. Thus the German courts still act in "continuation of the war effort of the Allied nations" of World War II.

Lawyer HORST MAHLER was convicted to 10 years and five months in prison for the nonviolent assertion of an historical thesis, thereby allegedly violating §130 on three counts.

HORST MAHLER is 79 years old and has been imprisoned since 2009. Without a doubt HORST MAHLER certainly belongs to Germany's most educated and most powerful contemporary thinkers and philosophers.

It is owing to his intellect, his wealth of ideas and his courage that he was considered to be a danger to the political establishment and that he needed to be locked away for the rest of his life. In contrast the imprisoned Chinese dissident, Liu Xiaobo, has been awarded the Nobel Prize for Peace!

During his time in prison the authorities neglected HORST MAHLER's health to the point where he had to be placed in intensive medical care, necessitating the amputation of his left leg. This, however, did not improve his position. His health has now reached such a critical state that the authorities are preparing for his imminent death by making plans to suppress any possible demonstrations by the German people.

It must be noted that HORST MAHLER had applied for release on parole after completing two thirds of the sentence, which is regularly granted to criminals after completion of half of their sentence.

HORST MAHLER is financially destitute and cannot afford a lawyer to take his action into court.

However he did succeed in publishing a cry for help from prison:

Dear friends,

For a long time I hesitated asking for help. But now my life is at stake.

My left leg has been amputated and the doctors struggle to avoid further losses.

Eventually one lawyer agreed to run my defence in court.

However, since I am financially ruined, I cannot pay him.

Furthermore, my application for release on parole has to be funded.

In addition, upon my release from prison a certain transformation of my home would be necessary to allow for the life of a disabled.

Please help! Many thanks in advance!
